CONGRESS HAILS THATCHER

'Don't help IRA' call to America

MRS THATCHER was repeatedly cheered and applauded during her speech yesterday to a joint session of the U.S. Congress during which she appealed to the Americans to stop giving funds to the I R A—" the enemies of democracy."

She also declared her support for President Reagan's "Space Wars" research programme, but not yet for the deployment of such weapons.

Later the Prime Minister met President Reagan in the White House where they discussed next month's U.S.-Soviet arms talks in Geneva and the need to maintain Nato's defensive unity. At the end of the talks, Mr Reagan was fulsome in praise of his "dear friend, Margaret Thatcher."

Agreement on need of Nato unity

By RICHARD BEESTON in Washington

PRESIDENT REAGAN and Mrs Thatcher yesterday discussed next month's United States-Soviet arms talks in Geneva.

They considered the belief that the Russians would try to hold the West "hostage" by linking progress in arms reductions to concessions over the development of America's space-defence plans.

At the end of their White House discussion Mr Reagan said that he and Mrs Thatcher agreed that unity, patience and determination of the Nato allies would be essential if the negotiations were to succeed.

Fulsome praise

"Mrs Thatcher and I agree it is absolutely necessary to continue Nato's Intermediate Nuclear Force deployments on schedule," said Mr Reagan, standing next to Mrs Thatcher outside the White House.

At the end of the talks and a working lunch Mr Reagan was fulsome in his praise for his dear friend Mrs Thatcher. "We as Americans are proud of our relations with our ally and I am personally proud of my close relation with my friend Margaret Thatcher," he declared.

Among the issues discussed in two-and-a-half hour of talks were East-West relations, arms control, the Middle East, Central America, Northern Ireland, international terrorism and the international economy.

24 breaks for cheers

By JAMES WIGHTMAN Political Correspondent in Washington

MRS THATCHER was given enthusiastic standing ovations before and during her 35-minute address to a joint session of the United States Congress yesterday.

She was interrupted 24 times by bursts of cheers and applause in the first speech to Congress by a British Prime Minister since Sir Winston Churchill spoke there in 1952.

The loudest applause came when she condemned I R A terrorism and praised President Reagan's economic and foreign policies, including his anti-missile space research programme.

There was prolonged applause for her warning that the Western alliance must stand firm against the Soviet Union and for her declaration: "Let us be under no illusions that it was Western strength, not Soviet goodwill that brought the Russians back to the negotiating table."

Resolute, but not hectoring

Mrs Thatcher was in characteristically resolute mood, but did not address her audience in the style which many of her critics call hectoring.

She did not try to lecture them about the Reagan Administration's budget deficit which affects British interest rates, and the state of the pound against the dollar.

But she also delivered a firm reminder of how much Britain contributes towards the defence of Europe.

She declared: "Like you, we use our strength and resolve to carry out our duties to our allies to the wider world.

"We were the first country to station cruise missiles on our territory. Britain led the rest.

"In proportion to our population, we stationed the same number of troops as you in Germany.

"In Central America we keep troops stationed in Belize at that Government's request.

"That is our contribution to sustaining democracy in a part of the world so vital to the United States.

"We have troops in Cyprus and in the South Atlantic and a small force in the Sinai at your request.

'We meet our responsibilities'

"British Servicemen are now on secondment to some 30 foreign countries. We were alongside you in Beirut.

"We worked with you in the Atlantic and in the Indian Ocean. Our Navy is on duty across the world.

"Britain meets her responsibilities in the defence of freedom throughout the world. She will go on doing so."

The Prime Minister gave President Reagan a declaration of support for continuing research into space defence against nuclear missiles, the Strategic Defence Initiative (S D I), also known as "Star Wars."

She stated: "If we are to maintain deterrents, as we must, it is essential that our research and capacity do not fall behind the work being done by the Soviet Union."

Then, in an indication that she would like British firms to be able to tender for contracts in the massive space programme, she added: "Indeed I hope that our own scientists will share in this research."

But Mrs Thatcher made clear

WASHINGTON PROTEST BY IRA SUPPORTERS

By Our Washington Staff

Several hundred protesters chanting "I R A — all the way" demonstrated peacefully some 200 yards from the Capitol building as Mrs Thatcher spoke to Congress yesterday.

Some held banners urging: "Stop Thatcher — send donations to Noraid," the fund-raising organisation for the Nationalists in Ulster, none of the speakers at the rally disowned the I R A.

Representative Mario Biaggi, the New York congressman who is a leading opponent of British policy in Ulster said their investigations over the past 15 years had never yet proved that contributions to Noraid went towards arms purchases. It was used to help "unfortunate families."

MRS FERRARO'S HUSBAND SENTENCED

By Our New York Staff

Mr John Zaccaro, 51, husband of Mrs Geraldine Ferraro, the unsuccessful Democratic vice-presidential contender, was sentenced to 150 hours community work yesterday for his part in a real estate fiddle.

In a sad conclusion of his year in the public spotlight, Mr Zaccaro said in court in New York yesterday "I have learned my lesson, judge, the hard way." His wife was not in court.

Mr Zaccaro was accused of taking part in a fraudulent scheme to obtain a loan to buy five buildings by offering official documents, inflating his own net worth and submitting a fraudulent contract.

NEW JOB BOOST FOR ECONMY

By Our Industrial Staff

The economy has been creating new jobs far faster than had been thought, according to revised figures issued yesterday by the Department of Employment.

The number of people in jobs rose by 342,000, in the year to last September. The employed labour force, including the self-employed and the Armed Forces, now stands at 25,494,000.

IRA's £1·7m bank cache handed over

By CHARLES LAURENCE in Dublin

MORE than £1·7 million of I R A cash held in a Bank of Ireland account was seized yesterday by the Republic's government under emergency legislation authorising the confiscation of funds belonging to illegal organisations.

The bank confirmed that the money had been held in an account in several names in one of its branches in the Republic. It would give no other details.

A Government spokesman was unable to say if the money handed over — £1,750,816·27 (Irish) — represented the entire I R A account or whether more was to come.

Security sources in Dublin continued to indicate that the money had been extorted through kidnaps and threats of murder, and that part of it was linked to the kidnap 15 months ago of Mr Don Tidey, chief executive of the Irish supermarket chain, Quinnsworth.

Associated Britsh Foods, the parent company of Quinnsworths, yesterday again denied paying any money following the kidnap.

'Protection money'

Despite denials, Irish security forces believe that the Provisional I R A collected money after Mr Tidey's kidnap in 1983: the seizure of the racehorse, Shergar, the same year; and from the kidnap of Mr Ben Dunne, of the Dunne's stores chain, in 1981.

It is thought that rather than being paid flat sum ransoms, the I R A has received "protection money" payments against promises not to abduct other executives, or other racehorses.

A claim for the return of the money is expected to be mounted in the High Court, either by Sinn Fein, the I R A's political wing, which is a legal organisation, or one of the unknown names on the Bank of Ireland account.

To maintain custody of the funds, the Government would have to prove that they belonged to the proscribed I R A.

SANDS' CASH SEIZED

Sister held £15,000

OUR DUBLIN CORRESPONDENT writes: Almost £15,000 held by a sister of the dead I R A hunger-striker, Bobby Sands, M P, is to be handed over to the Irish Government on the order of Dundalk court.

Police told the court yesterday that the money, in dollars and sterling, was found on top of a wardrobe at a flat occupied by Miss Bernadette Sands.

Witnesses claimed that the money had been donated by foreign visitors and was being taken to Belfast for Green Cross, an organisation that looks after the welfare of relatives of republican prisoners.

But a police inspector said the Irish Government was entitled to seize the money because it was to be used by an illegal organisation

CONCERN AT COMMONS LOG-JAM

By NICHOLAS COMFORT Political Staff

A THREE-HOUR Commons filibuster by Labour M Ps against the Government's handling of the Parliamentary timetable culminated last night in an admission from Mr Biffen, Leader of the House, that there was "deep unease on both sides" over some of the procedures being adopted.

The immediate argument was over the bringing forward a day earlier than planned, and only 24 hours after the Second Reading, of all remaining stages of emergency legislation to reverse a High Court ruling that over £50 million in subsidies intended for London Regional Transport should be handed over to the G L C.

But it reflected increasing confusion at Westminster over the progress and management of the Government's legislative programme.

DETENTION POWERS ON AIDS

Daily Telegraph Reporter

AIDS is not to be made a notifiable disease, but health authorities will be given powers to detain victims in exceptional circumstances, Mr Clarke, Health Minister, announced yesterday at a Press conference.

He said the risk of exposure to the Aids virus through blood transfusions was "miniscule", and he announced that all doctors would be getting advice on the killer disease.

Mr Clarke said the new powers to detain patients would be used in "rare and exceptional cases", such as when a dangerously infected and delirious patient refused to go into hospital.

Dr Donald Acheson, the Government's Chief Medical Officer said yesterday that because Aids could take three years to develop, the number of cases could rise to 2,000 by 1988, but would then decrease.

Earlier yesterday it was announced that Mr Stephen Hayward, 28, a prisoner from Camp Hill jail, Isle of Wight, who was an Aids suspect, was only suffering from a throat infection.

Miners' union rejects TUC peace plan

By JOHN RICHARDS Industrial Correspondent

MINERS leaders unanimously rejected last night fresh peace proposals drawn up in negotiations between the T U C, the Coal Board and Mr Walker, Energy Secretary.

The N U M delegates at a special conference today will be asked to reaffirm support for the 50-week pit strike after the 24-man union executive declared that the terms being offered were worse than those previously proposed by the Coal Board.

Their decision came after days of shuttle-diplomacy in which seven senior union chiefs on the T U C monitoring team had held talks with both Mr Walker and Mr Ian MacGregor, Coal Board chairman.

These had ended with a redrafting of the Board's original peace proposals in two key areas which the union found to be unacceptable.

Other pit news—P2

One paragraph amended was the Board statement that where no further reserves could be developed to provide the Board with a satisfactory basis for continuing operations, such a colliery would be closed.

The amended version was rejected, even though the Board's new draft said that any closure proposal would, if requested by either party, be referred under the modified colliery review procedure "before the Board takes its decision as to whether or not to close the colliery."

A second amendment called on the N U M to recognise the duty of the Coal Board to manage the industry efficiently to secure sound development in accordance with its responsibilities.

IBA BANS MI5 'PHONE TAP' FILM

By ROBIN STRINGER Radio and T V Correspondent

A CHANNEL 4 programme alleging that MI5 consistently taps the phones of Mr Arthur Scargill and Mr Mick McGahey was banned by the Independent Broadcasting Authority yesterday.

After taking counsel's opinion, the commercial channel planned to put the film on last night at 8 p.m. in place of the scheduled programme because it was considered a matter of considerable public interest.

But lawyers acting for the I B A who saw the programme yesterday morning advised the authority that it would be contravening Section Two of the Official Secrets Act.

Showing for M Ps

Entitled "M I 5's Official Secrets," the film contains an extensive interview with a woman called Cathy Massiter, said to have been an M I 5 officer between 1970 and 1984.

It alleges phone tapping of Left wing union leaders like Mr Scargill and Mr McGahey, the bugging of union pay negotiations, break-ins at the homes of union leaders such as Mr Ken Gill, and the infiltration by MI5 agents into organisations like C N D.

The producers of the film, Claudia Milne and Geoffrey Seed, took it to the Commons last night to show to MPs.

Mgr Bruce Kent, C N D general secretary, called the I B A's decision "very cowardly." Mr Larry Gostin, general secretary of the National Council for Civil Liberties, said: "The I B A is aiding and abetting a cover-up, instead of protecting the public's right to know."

Dollar's surge drives £ down again

By ANNE SEGALL Banking Correspondent

THE pound was unable to stand against the tide yesterday as the dollar surged to new peaks against most major currencies.

By the close of trading, the pound had lost half a cent, falling to within a whisker of its all-time dollar "low" at $1·0875. The sterling index declined from 71·6 to 71·4.

Dealers say the pound held up relatively well for most of the day, thanks to the psychological impact of Mrs Thatcher's visit to America.

For the second day running, the pound advanced against its Continental rivals, most notably the German Mark, before retreating in the last hours of trading to close unchanged against the Mark at 3·6226.

Market sources say there was absolutely no sign of the Bank of England intervention in support of sterling.

The strength of the dollar was attributed to a negative statement by Mr Paul Volcker, United States Federal Reserve Board chairman. He pointed out that the massive American budget deficit was drawing foreign money into America and pushing up the dollar.

Mr Volcker also confirmed that American intervention to hold the dollar down has been "light."

SELF-EMPLOYED SURGE HELPS CREATE JOBS

By STEPHEN WARD Industrial Staff

ENCOURAGING new figures published yesterday by the Department of Employment show that the economy has been creating jobs over the past year far faster than had been thought.

The figures, which were welcomed by the Employment Secretary, Mr Tom King, show a particularly sharp surge in the number of self-employed.

In the year to September, 1984 the labour force rose by 342,000, compared with an earlier estimate of 226,000.

The total in work, including the self-employed and the armed forces, now stands at 23,494,000. The number of self-employed has risen by 236,000 to 2,465,000, while the number employed by others has risen by 105,000 to 20,701,000.

Fewer hours lost

Latest figures also show that the number of hours lost through short-time working in manufacturing industry fell from 520,000 to 440,000 between November and December 1984. In December 1983, 465,000 hours were lost.

But wage costs per unit of output have risen by an annual rate of 5·6 per cent in the past quarter, showing that wages are outstripping gains in productivity. In Germany, Japan and Canada unit wage costs are falling and in the United States they are static.

Average earnings are continuing to increase at an annual rate of 7½ per cent., the same as for the past six months. More overtime is being worked — 12,580,000 hours a week in December compared with 11,360,000 in December 1983.

'Encouraging features'

Mr King said yesterday: "The continuing rise in employment, together with an increase in overtime and a reduction in short-time working in the fourth quarter of 1984, are encouraging features of the labour market."

But he gave a warning that the rise in labour costs were a danger to the continuing recovery of the economy, and the creation of further new jobs.

"If we are to generate more jobs and reduce the stubbornly high level of unemployment, it is imperative that we improve our competitiveness. More sensible pay bargaining is one of the ingredients necessary to achieve this."

Whitehall officials are still assessing the likely implications of the unexpected numbers of new jobs for future levels of unemployment, but it is quite possible for both the number in work and the number out of work to rise at the same time, as they have done for the past year.

This is because the "age profile" of the population is changing, with more people joining the job market than leaving it, so that the size of the labour pool is increasing.

This means the economy has to "run faster just to keep still" in terms of the levels of unemployment.

Yesterday's more optimistic figures emerged when Department of Employment statisticians updated their tables to take account of a detailed annual labour force survey based on questionnaires from 80,000 households, carried out last June.

Shop workers

In the two years up to mid-1983, the number of self-employed workers was increasing by between 12,000 and 13,000 a quarter, but since then the quarterly increase has jumped to between 68,000 and 69,000.

It was this jump which the assumptions had not covered, and has only just been disclosed by the labour force survey.

The rise in the number of self-employed is made up of a 93,000 increase in shops and hotels (13 per cent. up in a year), 53,000 more in the construction industry (13 per cent. up), 52,000 more in other services (up 15 per cent.), and 33,000 more in manufacturing (up 22 per cent.).

Two thirds of the new self-employed jobs are males, one third females. The figures do not show which firms have taken on the extra "employed" workers.

Using the latest figures, the total labour force has been rising steadily since March 1983, when it stood at 23,014,000. Before then it had been falling for almost two years, from a level in June 1981 of 23,752,000.

60 A WEEK EXPELLED BY NUM

By JAMES O'BRIEN

SIXTY working miners a week are now being expelled from the NUM in Durham at twice-weekly "star chamber" hearings held by the union's disciplinary committee.

Letters from the union in Durham and Northumberland are being "sent out like confetti" to miners who have gone back to work, demanding their appearance before the committee.

The union's disciplinary action is being taken under Rule 51, which was declared void and invalid by the High Court within a week of its introduction last July at a special NUM delegate conference.

Mrs Lilian Clark, a Durham solicitor, said yesterday: "I have had 300 miners who have come to me and want me to do something about various aspects of the strike and union action which has effected them personally.

"It is contemplated that something will be done about expulsions, and certainly, action will be taken against the Durham mechanics' sanction of the union."

The National Working Miners' Committee has declared its intention to bring a "test" case to court on behalf of an expelled miner in the North-East.

Dismissed men's fate a problem for NUM

By MAURICE WEAVER Industrial Staff

THE miner's union's commitment to secure the reinstatement of miners sacked during the coal strike before agreeing a final settlement is a priority which Mr Arthur Scargill knows he cannot abandon and which is a major negotiating ace up the Coal Board's sleeve.

A total of 709 men have been dismissed over the past 11 months for a variety of criminal offences or acts of "gross industrial misconduct." Of these, 57 have been reinstated on appeal but more possible sackings are under consideration.

Among the union membership at large there is a strong feeling of sympathy, or at least of collective responsibility, for many of them — certainly for those whose actions can be attributed to financial desperation or simply over-enthusiasm on the picket line.

Area Councils have made it plain to the union's negotiators that they will be unable to countenance any peace deal which does not take into account what is seen as the union's "debt" to its activists, even if some were misguided enough to go "over the top" in their actions.

There has already been union acceptance, however, that an across-the-board amnesty is not something the Coal Board will agree. The Board has emphasised that some men guilty of malicious violence, attacks on property or blatant profiteering from the strike will not be taken back in any circumstances.

In areas where the drift back to work has reached substantial proportions, the sacked men have begun to feel sufficiently isolated to lodge appeals and pit managers have been forced to take decisions on the basis of the gravity of offences.

A man convicted of stealing coal, for example, might have been selling it at a profit (in some areas racketeering in stolen coal became quite lucrative for a few strikers) but he might also have simply taken it to keep his own and neighbours' families warm. A distinction has to be drawn.

In North Derbyshire, where over 8,000 of the 10,500 miners are now at work, 30 dismissed strikers have successfully appealed and been reprieved. Not all were full reinstated, however; in some cases they were merely re-engaged with a loss of back-dated benefits.

Others have already lodged appeals with the Employment Appeals Tribunal, claiming unfair dismissal. Tribunals can order reinstatement or grant compensatory payments where cases are proved.

The Home Office's latest figures show that 9,542 strike-related arrests have been made with 7,755 people charged. Of the 5,106 which have been dealt with by the courts so far, 3,817 led to convictions and 1,289 to acquittals.

PERFUME CHARGES DROPPED

CONSPIRACY charges against five men alleged to have been involved in a fake perfume racket were quashed by the trial judge yesterday.

They were alleged to have set up factories in the back street of London to make large quantities of bogus Chanel No. 5 and 19 and Aramis aftershave.

Judge LAWRENCE VERNEY's decision at Aylesbury Crown Court to dismiss allegations that they conspired to defraud Chanel and Estee Lauder, came in the fourth week of the trail after two days of legal argument in the absence of the jury.

Mr MICHAEL HILL Q.C. prosecuting, said the five — STEPHEN JORY, 35; ROY PAIN, 38; ROBERT YOUNG, 25; and CHRISTOPHER HAWKINS, 35 — would now face charges under the Trades Descriptions Act.

Jory, of Paragon Road, Hackney, London, pleaded guilty to three offences of conspiracy to contravene the Act and guilty to an offence of offering to supply bottles of aftershave with a false trade description.

Pain of Shire Lane, Cholesbury, Bucks; Coles, of Ley Street, Ilford; and Young, of Churchill Terrace, Chingford, each denied three offences of conspiring to contravene the Trades Descriptions Act.

The judge ordered that a charge against Hawkins of conspiring to defraud members of the public should not be proceeded with.

Jory and Hawkins were released on bail, and the hearing was adjourned until today.

Angry moderate teachers' threat to join strike

By MARGOT NORMAN Education Staff

THE Assistant Masters' and Mistresses' Association, which announced this week it would not go on strike in support of the teachers' 12½ per cent. pay claim, has threatened to change its mind because of Sir Keith Joseph's latest statement in the House of Commons.

The traditionally moderate union, whose 95,000 members took strike action for the first time ever in last year's dispute, said the Education Secretary's integrity was now "in shreds."

Their anger was caused by his announcement on Tuesday that he saw no prospect of funding the restructuring package offered to teachers by local authority employers.

The employers have been desperately trying to keep the unions negotiating on the basis that more money might be available from central government funds in addition to the limited pay rises local authorities can afford within existing cashlimited funds, if only the unions would agree to talk about conditions (including restructuring and assessment) at the same time as pay.

Sir Keith said on Tuesday that there was "no prospect whatever" of extracting from the Treasury the seven per cent (£400 million) the employers' package would add to the salaries bill in its first year.

However, he repeated his earlier assurance of his willingness to fight in Cabinet for some sort of restructuring package, as long as it was affordable.

Last night the employers seized on this repeated assurance in an attempt to save the situation, and despatched a last-ditch appeal to the N.U.T to meet them to talk about "the totality of the teacher's job and remuneration."

Unprecedented chaos

On the teachers' side, disappointment and a strong feeling of having been conned produced a general conviction that next Tuesday's strikes by the two big unions, the N.U.T. and National Association of Schoolmasters / Union of Women Teachers, will mark the start of a long and unprecedentedly bitter bout of chaos in schools.

The local authorities have offered the teachers four per cent., plus arbitration, and have been turned down flat.

They admit that the seven-per cent. cited as the cost of their restructuring package is not quite the full cost.

Sixth formers 'replace dinner ladies'

By OUR EDUCATION STAFF

SIXTH formers are being recruited in Hertfordshire schools to replace school meals staff who were dismissed last year after a long dispute over wage cuts, the National Union of Public Employees claimed yesterday.

Mr John Toomey, NUPE area officer for Hertfordshire, said that the local authority had been able to fill only half the posts of the 1,000 staff who were dismissed when they refused to accept an economising package of wages, staff and holiday reductions.

This week Sir John Donaldson, Master of the Rolls, said that the Court of Appeal was "minded to dismiss the appeal" of Hertfordshire and East Sussex dinner ladies against their dismissal. He would give his reasons at a later date.

The dinner ladies were appealing against a decision by Mr Justice Mann last April, rejecting their claim that the county councils were wrong to ignore national agreements on pay and conditions.

"We are appalled and disgusted by the decision," said Mr Toomey. "The saddest thing is that many of the women who refused to work under the new contracts when they were introduced last year were those with the longest record of service and loyalty to the council."

THREE LIBYANS JAILED FOR BOMB ATTACKS

By GEORGE TURNBULL

THREE Libyan students who planted bombs at the Manchester homes of suspected opponents of Col Gaddafi's régime were jailed by Mr Justice CANTLEY at Manchester Crown Court yesterday.

At the end of the 13-day trial, held under tight security, the students, all at training colleges in Manchester, were found guilty of plotting and causing explosions in the Whalley Range area of Manchester in March last year.

Two explosions destroyed a car and damaged a house, injuring a baby and her Syrian-born mother.

Before passing sentence on the gang, who were said to have been in Manhester "to track down anti-Gaddafi elements," Mr Justice Cantley said: "In these days there is a fashion among fanatics and all sorts of odd people to try to impose their views on others by lethal processes such as bombings.

"It is a lamentable fact that any two or three or more people with a minority idea can inflict this kind of outrage on the general public."

He said he would have imposed life sentences if there had been any loss of life in the offences.

BEN KHALID AHMED MANSOUR, 23, of Delauneys Road, Crumpsall, Manchester, the leader of the gang, was sentenced to 12 years for plotting explosions and 12 years for causing an explosion.

MOHAMMED SHLEBAK, 25, of Dickenson Road, Manchester, received six years on each charge and TAHER ABOUZO, 23, also of Delauneys Road, was given five years on each count. All sentences are to run concurrently.

Collapsed in dock

ABDUL SALAM SHNAYB, 19, of Egmont Street, Manchester, was found not guilty of the conspiracy charge. He was not accused of causing an explosion.

When he was acquitted Shnayb collapsed and had to be carried from the dock, which was screened with bullet-proof glass.

The jury returned unanimous guilty verdicts on Mansour and Abouzon atfer retiring for more than three hours. They retired again before returning a 10-2 majority guilty verdict on Shlebak.

During the trial there were police snipers on the court building and armed officers sitting with the judge. Sniffer dogs were deployed in the court room before each day's hearing to search for explosives.

It emerged in the trial that Mansoor was a fervent supporter of the Libyan regime, and constantly tried to convert others to the cause.

He had the opportunity to pursue his aims when he became general secretary of the Libyan Students' Union in Britain.

It was alleged during the trial that Manour and another student Khalid Tantouch, who was deported before the bombings, both worked for the Libyan Government and that a "black list" naming anti-Gaddafi Libyans as "targets" had been prepared.

Mr Justice Cantley recommended Mansoor's deportation and told the other two defendant's: "I will leave it to the Home Office to decide whether it would be more cruel to send you back or to keep you here."

It was alleged that Mansoor organised the Manchester bombing missions and together with Abouzoz planted the time bombs, packed with military explosive, which wrecked a car and damaged a basement flat in Alnss Road, Whalley Range.

Prayer sessions

Abouzoz, who was given 10 minutes a day for prayer during the trial, did not give evidence, and several prosecution witnesses also refused to disclose their political views in court.

The main prosecution witnes was Miss DEBORAH HETHERINGTON, 22, a former police cadet who lived with Tantouch. She knew Libyans who were opposed to Gaddafi and one of them asked her to "bug" her boyfriend's flat.

When she told Tantouch he ordered her to find out all she could about the "Gaddafi enemies" in Manchester.

Later she went with the gang to Whalley Range where she was asked to point out the houses of the so-called enemies.

LIBYAN CHARGED

A Libyan was remanded in custody for a week at St Albans, Herts, yesterday accused of possessing explosives. Hassan Assali, 33, of Mount Drive, St Albans, was also charged with possessing electronic timing devices between February and May 1984.

A word in your ear . . . nuzzling up to his owner, Mrs Kay Sayers, in her pet shop at Aylesbury, Bucks, is Charlie, a yellow-backed chattering lory parrot, who was so ugly when he was hatched that his parents threw him out of the nest. Gas boiler in cold-deaths flat 'was leaking fumes'

GAS BOARD experts have discovered that the central heating boiler in the London flat where a family died of hypothermia last week was giving off dangerous levels of carbon monoxide.

Police said last night that the boiler was in a poor state, in the gasmen's opinion.

Earlier yesterday a Southwark inquest was told by pathologist Prof. HUGH JOHNSON that he found traces of carbon monoxide in the bodies of Mrs HELEN SMITH, 31, and her 11-year-old daughter, NATASHA.

There was none in the body of Mrs Smith's 13-year-old son MICHAEL, who died in hospital two days after being brought out of the icy maisonette in Doddington Grove, Walworth.

"But it might be that he had, as it were, blown it off before he subsequently died," Prof. Johnson said

"The fact that three people should be overcome in one place is very suggestive of inhalation of carbon monoxide."

The inquest was adjourned until March 21.

And last night Southwark council said its engineers are checking every gas central heating installation on the Doddington Grove estate.

Council leader, Mr Tony Ritchie said: "Although police investigations have not been completed and it is too early to say what caused the poisoning, I am not prepared to take any chances with people's lives.

"The age of these flats and the need to spend substantial amounts of money on houses in Southwark is a continuing source of worry to me."

At the weekend the council said that last Wednesday, two days befoore Mrs Smith and Natasha were found dead, council engineers had checked the central heating in the maisonette and passed it as satisfactory.

Snowballer 'led police to IRA cache'

AN Irishman casually playing snowballs, unaware that he was under the gaze of undercover police and that he had led them to a big IRA explosives cache, an Old Bailey jury heard yesterday.

Mr NATALINO VELLA, 30, had been followed from London to snow-covered Annesley Forest, Nottinghamshire, on January 17 last year, said Det Insp. MATTHEW DWYER of Scotland Yard's Special Branch.

Mr Vella, from Dublin, had been one of the targets in a game of cat and mouse which began when he boarded an early morning train at Euston for Northampton.

The officer said Mr Vella—who is not on trial—and three other men were secretly photographed as they left Northampton station in a white car.

One of the men was PAUL KAVANAGH, who, with THOMAS QUIGLEY, also 29 and from Belfast, is on trial. They are accused between them of 10 terrorist offences, including three murders.

They are said to have been members of a Provisional IRA unit which carried out a month-long series of bomb attacks in London in the autumn of 1981.

They are accused of murdering Mrs Norah Field, 59, and Mr John Breslin, 18, who both died when a nail bomb exploded outside Chelsea barracks on Oct. 10, 1981, and explosives expert Mr Kenneth Howarth, killed while defusing a bomb in an Oxford Street Wimpy bar on Oct. 26, 1981.

Det. Insp. Dwyer described how the white car adopted "anti-surveillance" manoeuvres in an unsuccessful attempt to throw-off would-be pursuers. "Vehicles kept on changing so the car would not appreciate it was being followed," he told the jury.

The jury has heard that in Annesley Forest police later seized two buried plastic fermentation bins containing 115lb of gelignite.

On the same day Kavanagh, Mr Vella and the other two led the surveillance team to Salcey Forest, Northamptonshire, where another "comprehensive collection of terrorist hardware," was also recovered.

The trial was adjourned until today.

81-OFFENCE DRIVER BANNED

PATRICK GOLDSMITH, 28, admitted 81 driving offences at Bridgend magistrates court, Mid Glamorgan, yesterday and said: "From now on I'll go by bus."

Goldsmith, of Chelsea Avenue, Cefn Glas., Mid Glamorgan, was stopped by police 16 times in 10 weeks for offences including having no tax, M O T certificate, insurance or licence, and having defective tyres, brakes and lights.

He was fined a total of £550 for 24 offences and given an absolute discharge for the remainder. He was banned from driving for five years, and given a 14-day suspended sentence for non-payment of fines for previous driving offences.

Mr BEN OLIVER, stipendiary magistrate said: "Parliament in its wisdom has not seen fit to make it possible for me to send you to prison for any one of these offences."

Mildly psychopathic

Mr ROY SNAPE, for Goldsmith, told the court: "I said earlier we were not dealing with a nutcase and from the reports it seems my diagnosis was correct in that he is not a nutcase as such.

"Certainly he has a mild psychopathic personality which might explain his quite extraordinary behaviour."

Mr Snape said Goldsmith, like many young men nowadays, had a sort of fatal attraction for cars. "Some people have it for females but as you know there are many young people who seem to regard a motor car as almost the be all and end all of life.

Stopped during bail

The court heard that just three days after being given bail while reports were prepared Goldsmith was stopped for a 17th time and charged with seven more offences.

But Mr Snape said his client that occasion, but agreed to had not intended to drive on take home a friend who had and then drunk himself over driven him to a public house the limit.

Goldsmith was ordered to pay the fine at the rate of £10 a week.

JUDGE HALTS ROBBERY TRIAL

The Old Bailey case of five men and one woman accused concerning the £6 million Security Express robbery on Easter Monday 1983 was halted and a retrial ordered yesterday by Judge Richard Lowry, for legal reasons.

The trial, expected to last up to 14 weeks, was stopped on its third day before the Crown concluded its opening statement and a fresh trial with a new jury will begin today.

DEATH'S DOOR

A cocked pistol stuck in the belt of Senor Gonzalo Martin, Mayor of Candaba, Philippines, shot him dead when he slammed his car door on it. His driver ran out of petrol while trying to get him to hospital.

PRIESTS CROSS FENCE AT U.S. AIR BASE

Three priests were among seven people detained by Ministry of Defence police yesterday after scaling the 7ft security fence around the American air base at Alconbury, Cambridgeshire, helped by C N D supporters.

They were identified as the Rev. Rowan Williams, Dean of Clare College, Cambridge, Fr Michael Winter, Dean of St. Edmunds House, Cambridge, and the Rev. Michael Scott, of Peterborough.

A spokesman for Christian C N D said they had intended holding an Ash Wednesday service on the main runway in support of protesters at Molesworth, six miles away, demonstrating against the deployment of cruise missiles.

ARSON INQUIRY AFTER HOLIDAY HOME BURNS

Forensic scientists and senior detectives yesterday began an examination of a Welsh holiday home owned by a Middlesex family which was badly damaged by fire on Tuesday night.

The cottage, two miles from the village of Beddgelert, in Snowdonia, is owned by a family of Ickenham, Uxbridge. Extensive damage was caused to the roof and bedrooms.

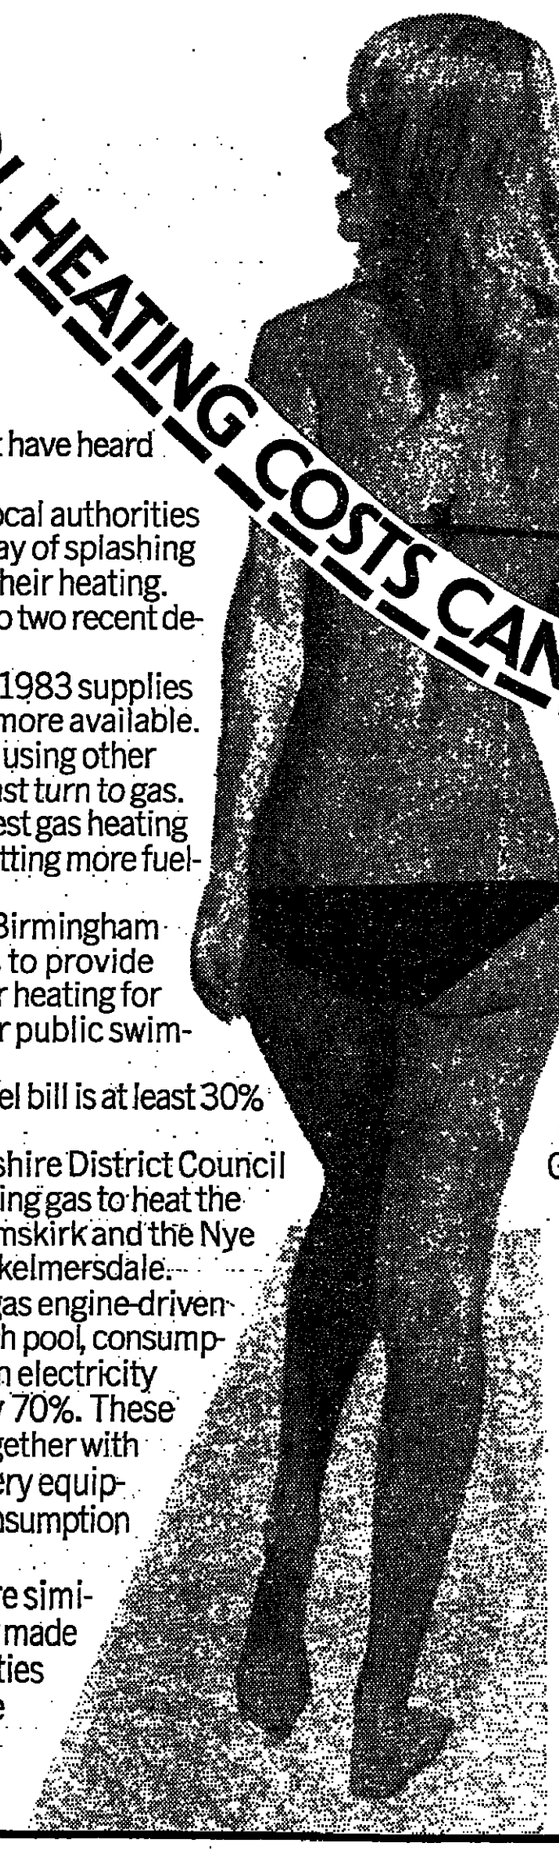
Welsh Nationalist extremists have been responsible for a large number of arson attacks on English-owned second homes in mid and north Wales.

TV SOAP OPERAS BARRED IN PUBS

Bank's & Hansons, the Black Country brewery group, has banned watching of the television soap operas "Dallas," "Coronation Street," "Crossroads" and "Dynasty" in its public houses.

A spokesman for the group, which has 400 managed pubs, said television was killing the art of conversation and the pub atmosphere. Customers will still be allowed to watch sport.

POOL HEATING COSTS CAN DIP 50%.



You may not have heard about it yet.

But many local authorities have found a way of splashing out far less on their heating.

This is due to two recent developments.

One. In late 1983 supplies of gas became more available.

So councils using other fuels could at last turn to gas.

Two. The latest gas heating equipment is getting more fuel-efficient.

The City of Birmingham changed to gas to provide space and water heating for their Great Barr public swimming baths.

Now their fuel bill is at least 30% lower.

West Lancashire District Council were already using gas to heat the Park Pool at Ormskirk and the Nye Bevan Pool in Skelmersdale.

By fitting a gas engine-driven generator at each pool, consumption of bought-in electricity was reduced by 70%. These installations together with new heat recovery equipment, cut gas consumption by 50%.

And there are similar savings being made by local authorities up and down the country.

Whether they're heating sports centres, conference centres, schools, town halls or hospitals.

If you'd like to know what the use of gas could do for your council undertakings, both existing and prospective, contact Commercial Sales at your British Gas region.

We'll help you by answering both your current and future fuel requirements. We'll also advise you on what equipment best suits those needs.

You'll be pleasantly surprised how quickly the resultant savings will pay for the cost of the new installation.

ISRAELIS SHOOT DEAD 2 ARMED VILLAGERS

By JAMES MacMANUS in Beirut

ISRAELI troops shot dead two armed villagers in southern Lebanon yesterday, escalating the harsh conflict between the largely Shi'ite population and the occupying Army.

The two villagers were shot while trying to evade an Israeli search of the village of Bazouriyeh, east of the port of Tyre, according to a military spokesman in Tel Aviv.

United Nations sources in the area confirmed the deaths and said that about 200 of the villagers had been detained for interrogation after the early-morning raid on the hilltop cluster of houses.

On Monday an Israeli major was killed near the village in a remotely controlled roadside explosion the day after an Army sergeant was killed by a bomb attack in the village itself.

Phalangist and Lebanese Army positions.

Angered by casualties

Bazouriyeh is one of six Shi'ite villages in a seven-square-mile area close to Tyre and the coast road that local population call the "arc of resistance" to Israeli rule in the south.

Two of the villages have been subjected to tough search operations in the past 10 days in which scores of people have been detained and four have been killed.

Angered by high casualties as it plans the next stage of the withdrawal from southern Lebanon, the Israeli Army is increasingly being drawn into a war of attrition with the Shi'ite community according to diplomatic observers in the Lebanese capital.

The mood of outrage among the southern Lebanese population, especially in the Tyre region, matches the evident anger of the Israeli troops, pointing to continued clashes between the two until the next stage of the withdrawal.

Observer murdered

Meanwhile gunmen in the hills above Beirut shot dead the French commander of a five-man observer force near the Druze town of Shweifat yesterday.

The officer was the fourth member of the 80-man observer force to be killed this year.

The volunteer force, drawn from all services of the French Armed Forces, monitors cease-fire lines between the Druze and other Left-wing militias and Phalangist and Lebanese Army positions.

After the murder the Druze militia, the Popular Socialist party (P S P), denied involvement. French sources said that it appeared that the killers had been entertained to tea by the French officers before they returned in masks to murder the commander.

HARD-LINE POLICY

Israel retaliates

MAIER ASHER reports from Jerusalem: Mr Babin, Israeli Defence Minister, has decided Israel will retaliate against Shi'ite terrorists with house demolitions, curfews, arrests and deportations.

He has visited Israeli troops in Lebanon, where an Israeli colonel, a major, and several soldiers have been killed in attacks in the last two days.

The decision on a hard-line policy follows strong criticism that the Army command is not doing enough to protect soldiers.

The haziness of the Government's policy in the belief that Israel's reputation abroad could be tarnished by drastic military measures is disapproved of by those suffering from the attacks. They say criticism cannot be weighed against loss of blood.

PLO leaders qualify role in peace plan

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE leadership of the Palestine Liberation Organisation, meeting in Tunis, has approved the agreement reached by its chairman, Yasser Arafat, and King Hussein of Jordan 10 days ago.

A statement issued yesterday said the agreement, the text of which has not yet been released, called for a peaceful settlement with Israel achieved through an international conference at which the P L O would be present in its capacity as "the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinians."

However, the P L O's role which would be immediately unacceptable to Israel has been toned down to some extent by a qualifying statement that it would be part of a joint Arab delegation, "to be formed after complete Arab support for the plan is gained."

Avoided 'independent'

Equally fudged is the question of a Palestinian State on the West Bank and in Gaza. Abu Jihad, deputy commander of the P L O forces, spoke in an interview with a Saudi newspaper of the Palestinian State being part of a confederation with Jordan.

He appears to have consciously avoided using the word "independent" in connection with the Palestinian State.

Yesterday's statement in Tunis repeated the PLO's rejection of United Nation's Resolution 242, although the Hussein-Arafat agreement is believed to give a blanket acceptance to United Nations resolutions on the Middle East.

The PLO's difficulty with Resolution 242 is that, in its view, the resolution regards the Palestinians as refugees and makes no mention of their national rights. For roughly similar reasons conneced with sovereignty and self-determination, the Tunis statement also rejected the Camp David Accords and President Reagan's 1982 peace proposal.

Signor Craxi, Italian Prime Minister who is also the president of the European Community Council, said yesterday that the Hussein-Arafat agreement did not provide a framework for peace talks. He has had talks recently with Mr Arafat and last week received a letter from him dealing with the agreement.

Mr Peres said at a joint Press conference with Signor Craxi that he wanted direct talks with King Hussein and was ready to go to Jordan for them.

"We oppose the international conference," he said. "We are not looking for a show, we are looking for a dialogue."

The question of an international conference was undoubtedly discussed in Vienna during two days of talks, ending yesterday, between senior American and Soviet officials. The Russians have promoted the idea of an international conference that would bring them into the Middle East negotiating scene.

Neither side commented on what progress, if any, was made at the Vienna talks, which covered the Gulf War and Afghanistan as well as the Arab-Israel dispute, but statements will probably be issued from the respective capitals.

'Aid saves 67,000 at Sudan 'death village'

By R. BARRY O'BRIEN in Khartoum

FOOD airlifts and emergency supplies of water trucked daily across a roadless desert have averted a disaster for 67,000 Ethiopian refugees at Wad Sharifei camp in East Sudan.

A long-awaited supply effort by the United States and United Nations agencies has transformed the situation at the camp, a focus of world concern two weeks ago when it had neither food nor water.

Daily trucking of wate from Kassala, which has a plentiful supply, began two weeks ago on Feb. 7 and food has been airlifted to Kassala by the United Nations Childrens Fund and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

A Swiss Red Cross doctor and aid workers at Wads Sharifei spoke of the changed situation when Mr Raison, Minister of Overseas Aid, visited the desert camp at a foot of a mountain range yesterday on his five-day visit to Sudan.

U.S. ROW ON JAPAN'S CAR QUOTA

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

MR LEE IACOCCA, the outspoken chairman of the Chrysler Motor Corporation, threatened yesterday to cancel a $10 billion (£9,15 billion) expansion plan in the United States if President Reagan allowed quotas on Japanese car imports to lapse.

Chrysler stands to suffer the most from an end to the restrictions because it has concentrated in recent years on producing small cars to compete with Japanese models.

On Tuesday Mr Reagan's top trade advisers recommended that he should not seek renewal of Japan's voluntary quotas when they run out at the end of March.

Although Mr Reagan could reject the advice, informants said that, as a strong advocate of free trade, he can be expected to accept it and make an announcement within a few days.

Trade officials are said to believe that the voluntary restraints are no longer needed because of the recovery of the American motor industry.

Other fields

Some Reagan advisers wanted the President to let the quotas lapse while pressing the Japanese to liberalise their trade regulations in other fields to allow more American goods on to the Japanese market. But it is not clear if he will do this.

Under the quota system about 1,800,000 Japanese cars are imported into the United States each year. Mr Bill Brock United States Trade Respresentative, said yesterday that without the restraints — this total could rise by about 40 per cent. The restraints have been in force since 1981.

Mr Iacocca, who is credited with hauling Chrysler back from the brink of collapse to the point where it has just announced a $2·4 billion (£2·19 billion) profit, warned of a possible change in investment plans once Mr Reagan announced his decision on the quotas.

"Once they've made their call, we'll make ours," he said.

Other Chrysler officials said the company might cancel plans for three new American plants and transfer some production overseas.

Motor industry analysts said that the restrictions on Japanese car imports had "saved" about 44,000 American car workers' jobs. But consumer groups maintain that the system has enabled American manufacturers to keep their prices high.

ARMS PLEA BY GUERRILLAS

A senior Afghan guerrilla leader appealed yesterday for guns, medical supplies and increased political support, saying he was not sure how much longer his men could resist a mounting Soviet offensive in Afghanistan.

Abdul Hag, comander of Hezb-I-Islami guerrillas based near Kabul, said at a news conference in Paris that their priority was weaposn to combat Soviet aircraft and tanks spearheading attacks on outlying vilages.—Reuter.

Russia allows checks of civil N-plants

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE Soviet Union will sign a "safeguards" agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency in Vienna today, opening a so-far-unspecified number of nuclear plants to international inspection.

The agreement will apply only to civil nuclear power plants and related establishments.

The United States, Britain and France have had similar agreements in force for many years.

They, like the Soviet Union, are nuclear-weapon States. The purpose of a safeguards agreement is to prevent the undetected diversion of nuclear materials that could be used to make military explosives.

Positions not fixed

Negotiations between the agency and the Soviet Union have been spread over more than two years. Today's signing is significant in that for the first time sensitive facilities inside the Soviet Union will be opened to an international inspectorate.

Timing of the signing is intended to emphasise that point. With United States-Soviet arms-control negotiations due to resume next month and a conference on disarmament in Europe making snail-like progress in Stockholm, the Soviet Union is anxious to show that it is no longer locked into fixed positions.

The question remains whether the acceptance of safeguards on civil nuclear establishments will be reflected in acceptance of on-the-spot verification of arms agreements.

The Soviet Union is rapidly expanding its output of electricity from nuclear power plants for environmental as well as economic reasons. This year it is expected that 24 per cent. of the electricity produced in the European part of the country will come from nuclear power plants.

The signing of the safeguards agreement should reduce some of the criticism the Soviet Union and other nuclear-weapons States will face at the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty review conference in Geneva in September.

Glemp starts 10-day British tour today

By ROBIN GEDYE

CARDINAL JOZEF GLEMP of Poland arrives today on the first official visit to Britain by a Polish Primate.

His trip, intended to stress spiritual unity in Europe, comes as his own Church is placed under increasing pressure by the Polish government.

The highpoint of his 10-day tour of England, Scotland and Wales is expected to be a gathering of 21 bishops and four cardinals from East and West Europe at a Mass in Westminster Cathedral next Wednesday.

Cardinal Glemp, 55, hopes to meet some of the 100,000 Poles living in Britain and thank the various charities that have contributed towards shipments of food, medical supplies and clothing to Poland.

The Polish Primate is the guest of Cardinal Hume, head of the Roman Catholic Church of England and Wales, who will lead a welcoming Mass in Westminster Cathedral today.

In the afternoon Cardinal Glemp flies to Edinburgh for a brief tour of Scotland ending on Saturday in Glasgow from where he flies to Manchester.

On Sunday he visits Bradford, Huddersfield and Leeds, Monday Newark and Leicester, and Tuesday Coventry and Birmingham.

He returns for various engagements in London on Wednesday and Thursday, makes a one-day trip to Wales on Friday, when he visits Cardiff, and returns to London before leaving for Warsaw on March 3.

The cities Cardinal Glemp is to visit contain the greatest concentrations of Poles, most of whom came to Britain during or after the Second World War.

About 115 Polish clergymen are working in 28 Polish churches and about 50 chapels.

Cardinal Glemp is likely to be facing tough questioning from the expatriate Poles he meets, many of whom are convinced that the Roman Catholic Church in Poland, and Cardinal Glemp in particular, should have been far tougher in helping the Solidarity trade union resist the imposition of martial law in December 1981.

He was appointed Primate in 1981 at a difficult time. He succeeded the late Cardinal Wyszynski, who had not only presided over the birth of Solidarity, but virtually become a legend in his own time by surviving periods of house arrest in defence of his beliefs.

Cardinal Glemp was plunged almost immediately into Poland's most difficult post-war period and had to guide the Church at a time when it was itself threatened with fresh constraints.

20 ARRESTED IN LAHORE DEMO

By Our Islamabad Correspondent

At least 20 political activists were arrested in Lahore yesterday when the assembled to protest against widespread arrests of politicians and supporters prior to the national elections in Pakistan on Monday.

Opposition sources said more than 350 people have been arrested in the last two weeks on the charge of advocating a boycott of the national assembly polls. The boycott call follows the refusal by President Zia to permit political parties to fight the election.

NO GIVING WAY TO ARGENTINA

By DAVID ADAMSON Diplomatic Correspondent

THE Commons Foreign Affairs Committee's suggestion in its December report on the Falklands that now might be the time to offer olive branches to Argentina has been slapped down.

The Government response in a White Paper published yesterday rejects recommendations that Britain should unilaterally announce an end to fortification of the islands and lifting of the maritime Protection Zone as soon as Argentina formally declares hostilities ended.

"As has been made clear on many occasions, the Government intend that our defensive positions in the Falkland Islands will be maintained at the level necessary to ensure that there is no repetition of the events of 1982," the White Paper says.

As for the Protection Zone, a decision to lift it will be taken in "the light of our assessment of all the relevant considerations."

'Not sole trigger'

The White Paper adds that a formal declaration by Argentina of an end to hostilities would have a positive impact on relations with Britain but could not be the sole trigger for action over the Protection Zone.

Short shrift is given to the Foreign Affairs Committee's recommendation that the Government should consider inviting the United Nations Decolonisation Committee to the Islands.

"We would need to be persuaded . . . that such a visit would permit an impartial consideration of the situation in the islands, especially the central question of self-determination," the White Paper says.

"Since the conflict the majority of the Committee of 24 (on decolonisation) have proved to be strong supporters of the Argentine position."

Sovereignty claim

The Government is equally firm in dealing with the Foreign Affairs Committee's reluctance to come to a categorical decision on the legal validity of Britain's claim to sovereignty.

The committee's argument that assertions of confidence in Britain's title to the islands are belied by the fact of the 1967 and 1982 negotiations with Argentina is described as "surprising."

The willingness of successive British Governments to seek a negotiated resolution of differences should not be taken as a reflection of doubts about British title.

However, the committee's support for the Government's refusal to discuss sovereignty in the present situation is welcomed.

PRINCESS SEES GOOD AND BAD OF CALCUTTA

By JENNY SHIELDS in Calcutta

PRINCESS ANNE yesterday saw some of the sights that have given Calcutta such a tarnished reputation: the slums and malnourished children, the abandoned babies and the destitute pavement-dwellers.

But she also saw the brave efforts of the voluntary agencies battling against squalor, disease and ignorance to improve the lot of the city's poorest inhabitants.

At Sishu Bhaven, the mission started by Mother Teresa in 1950, Princess Anne met Sister Margaret Mary, who runs a busy adoption programme.

"Here we fight abortion with adoption," Sister Margaret Mary told her royal guest.

Babies arrive at the home from all over the city at all times of the day. Small bundles of swaddled, new-born infants are often thrust into the caring hands behind the iron gates, abandoned to the charge of the 22 Sisters of Charity.

Red-light district

Others are born there. Many pregnant mothers who arrive at Sishu Bhaven are young unmarried schoolgirls or prostitutes from the red-light district, who are persuaded to have their babies rather than terminate their pregnancies.

But the babies are never with the nuns for long. "They don't grow up here. We have families all over India and Europe who want to adopt, and language has never proved a barrier," Sister Margaret Mary said.

It takes between six and 12 months to complete the legal formalities, but once children have the important Abandonment Certificate, they can leave the home for new lives.

The Princess was told that about 500 babies every year were adopted, and the only stipulation was that they went to a caring home. "If a rickshaw-puller wants to adopt a baby, he can. Our children don't just go to well-off homes," the sister said.

One child, a bright-eyed girl called Natasha, will soon be collected by her new parents and taken back to Liverpool.

Relief centre

The babies' ward is a spotlessly clean, airy room on the first floor of the building. Cheerful curtains depicting cartoon characters hang at the window, and there are soft toys on the walls.

The happy nursery could be 100 miles from the miserable conditions into which most of the children were born. The youngest—many just a few days old—sleep in soft wicker baskets in two small side rooms, and the sight of so many little children seemed to move Princess Anne as she peeked into their cots.

But adoption, which has been successfully carried out with the support of West Bengal's Marxist government for many years, is not the only concern of the nuns. Sishu Bhaven is their main relief centre, from where they direct all their charitable projects in India, and from where all the foreign aid is distributed.

They also care for acutely sick children whom the hospitals seem reluctant to admit, and their work with the destitute and dying in Calcutta's filthy back streets has become known worldwide.

At the end of her visit, the Princess told the sisters: "You do marvellous work; it must be very tiring, but you are all smiling and the children look happy." And she added that, although she had not spent as much time with them as her brother, the Prince of Wales, had done on his visit, she had been able to see much more of the city than he had.

The Princess' first engagement of the day was at the Child in Need Institute, 12 miles outside Calcutta, which is partly sponsored by the Save the Children Fund, of which she is president.

Beds never empty

Started 11 years ago, it provides a necessary health care service for the mothers and babies living in poverty in slums and villages of South Calcutta.

Because it is the only specialist paediatric clinic in this part of India, its beds are never empty. While the medical staff treat the malnourished babies, with an increasing success rate, the mothers are given lessons in health care and nutrition and taught simple income-generating skills, such as sewing, weaving and chicken-rearing.

The Princess also visited the All Bengal Women's Union, which has provided care and rehabilitation for women and girls "rescued from moral danger," since 1932.

Apart from its work with the women from the Bustees (slums) and the red-light areas, the union has also formed a kindergarten, to give a simple education to the young children of the slums and the streets.

PEASANTS RESTORE PALACE

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

PEKING'S original summer palace, Yuanmingyuan, Garden of Perfection and Light, looted and burned to the ground by British and French troops in 1860, is about to be partially restored on the outskirts of Peking by peasants.

In one of the darker moments of the Opium Wars, colonialist forces destroyed the magnificent stone edifice as a pressure tactic to make the Imperial Court "see reason."

Gordon of Khartoum, then a young captain in the Royal Engineers, helped to set the fire taking his orders from the eighth Earl of Elgin.

Constructed over a period of 63 years from 1709, it was the largest royal garden in the world, with artificial lakes watered by natural springs and 200 pavilions and temples.

'Square teapot'

An emperor could stroll across the man-made hills and happen on a spot such as the "vista of the Square Teapot."

Today the only things left are elegant but broken classical columns, the remnants of marble fountains, and the ruined "Hall of Tranquility," set in acres of weeds. The overgrown site is a grazing ground for goats and sheep.

Interest in restoration was initially stirred by the late Prime Minister, Chou En-lai. More recently a Chinese film depicting "Barbarians" razing the building became a huge box-office success.

Now the Government has decided to turn the site into a "heritage park." Help is coming from local peasants who, it seems, have made so much money through the free-market system of selling produce that they want to spend £160,000 on making the area a prime tourist attraction.

The Peking Metropolitan Government has allocated a further £150,000 for the exterior wall and some rebuilding work. A further £3,000,000 is expected from local government coffers.

Imperial plunder

Xiao Yinxin, deputy administrator, estimated that the whole park would cost about £50 million.

Before reducing the garden to ashes troops spent 12 days plundering the imperial treasure house of jewels, gold, porcelain, bronzes, silks, and sculptures. Some of the loot went to Queen Victoria and Napoleon III.

However, China has not asked Britain or France to hand anything back, although Chinese are helping to track down relics that were lost locally.

Four white marble lions have been found in a private garden, and a municipal construction team has unearthed 300 cubic metres of rectangular stone slabs, which are being moved back to the site.

Evil spirits still play major role in rural life

By HUGH DAVIES in Peking

SUPERSTITION persists in rural China and can have grim consequences as peasants try to ward off evil spirits.

The case of a 16-year-old girl's death by hanging has been cited.

According to local authorities police were astounded to find at the village of Anshan in the southern province of Hunan that Xu Xuexan had been murdered by her father, Xu Kebang, who slit her throat to ensure she was dead.

His confession was even more shocking. He admitted that he had also tried to drown his daughter and to burn her to death.

He blamed an elderly woman, Zhou Yumei, the village soothsayer, whom the newspaper called a "witch."

The daughter suddenly fell mentally ill, the report said. Her distraught father consulted the soothsayer, who asserted that the girl had become a "frog spirit" and that disaster would befall the family if she remained alive.

The father then tied his daughter in a sack and tried to drown her in a river.

One of the man's sons intervened. The soothsayer then persuaded the father to burn the girl alive. He bought 12 cans of petrol, poured it on to straw bundles, and prepared a fire.

Two associates of the soothsayer brought the girl, screaming, to the burning fire. Hearing her cries, her brother again intervened, and the girl, badly burned, was taken back to her bed.

The soothsayer supposedly then told the father he must choose between his family of eight and his daughter.

"Try to get it over with as soon as possible," she is said to have told him.

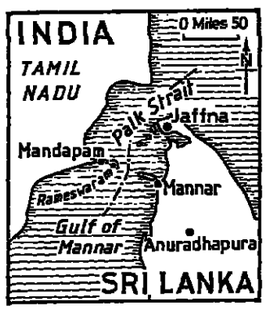
He immediately took a rope, hanged the girl, and then used a knife on her body.

Both the father and the soothsayer were under arrest and facing a charge of murder at the time of the report.

Gandhi calls talks on Sri Lanka tension

By BALRAM TANDON in New Delhi

MR RAJIV GANDHI, Indian Prime Minister, senior ministers and officials are to hold urgent talks this weekend with Mr M. G. Ramachandran, Tamil Nadu Chief Minister, over the increased tension in the Palk Straits and the Jaffna peninsula of Sri Lanka.



Mr S. J. S. Chatwal, India's High Commissioner to Sri Lanka, is already in New Delhi and has spent two days conferring with officials in the Foreign Ministry.

Mr Ramachandran is flying to New Delhi although he is still to recover fully from a stroke that left him partially paralysed and a kidney transplant, for which he needs constant medical attention.

Special urgency has been added to the talks in New Delhi by the latest statement from Mr J. R. Jayawardhene, President of Sri Lanka. Addressing Parliament in Colombo yesterday, he asserted that the three secessionist groups of Tamil Tigers had joined forces, to confront the Sri Lankan Army in a "do or die" battle.

Training bases

The President's statement followed a proposition he made through the Sri Lankan Foreign Minister last weekend suggesting that the Indian and Sri Lankan navies co-ordinate their operations in the Palk Straits to prevent the passage of guerrillas and weapons between the south Indian peninsula and the Jaffna area in northern Sri Lanka.

Mr Jayawardhene elaborated on the proposition when he addressed Parliament yesterday, confirming that his idea was to get the Indian Government involved in implementing its own assurances that it was neither harbouring Tamil Tiger terrorists nor allowing them training bases or weapons.

Mr Jayawardhene's assertion followed Mr Gandhi's declarations during a tour of the South Indian state of Karnataka that his government would not invade Sri Lanka and it did not plan to repeat a military operation in support of the Tigers as it had done in East Bengal in 1971.

Front pages of most Indian newspapers over the past week have carried banner-headlined reports of rapidly increasing belligerence by the Sri Lankan Army and Navy.

During the last two days alone the newspapers have spoken of unprovoked firing by Sri Lankan naval patrols on Tamils fleeing the offensive by troops in Jaffna.

Another report said the Sri Lankan Army had given a three-week ultimatum to the Tamils in northern Sri Lanka to leave or face a fierce offensive.

The Sri Lankan High Commission denied the reports in a Press note released in New Delhi yesterday. The High Commission said that "it was a matter of concern that certain sections of the Press continue to highlight such baseless reports."

None of these reports have been confirmed by the Indian foreign ministry.

POSTAL STRIKE IN THAILAND

By Our Bangkok Correspondent

About 2,000 Thai postal and telecommunications workers went on strike yesterday to protest against a government plan to turn the state-owned enterprise into a private concern.

Strikers took over the General Post Office late on Tuesday, stockpiling rice and other food supplies in preparation for a siege. International telephone and telex services are not affected but mail handling has stopped.

CHINA CHANGES STANCE ON NUCLEAR TALKS

By Our Geneva Correspondent

China has indicated its willingness to join Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union in an ad hoc committee working on a nuclear test ban, in what appears to be a major reversal of previous policy.

Ambassador Quian Jiandong told the 40-nation United Nations conference on disarmament in Geneva that China would "reconsider" its refusal to join previous ad hoc working groups if one were established this year.

Reconsideration by China would leave France alone among the five nuclear powers in refusing to join an ad hoc working group discussing a nuclear test ban. France has yet to speak to the disarmament conference on the issue this year.

SPLITTING BRITAIN? WHAT NONSENSE, SAYS THATCHER

By FRANK TAYLOR in Washington

MRS THATCHER appeared on the morning news programmes of all the national television networks in America yesterday and found herself being questioned sharply about her methods of governing Britain.

Told by one interviewer that some critics said she was allowing her politics and personality to split the country "into haves and have-nots," she replied:

"Oh, what absolute nonsense.

"It's usually one of the things they say, but, goodness me, if you're going to have two political parties you're going to have two views. What's the alternative? What do they want? A one-party state?

"I never take any notice of it. Nor do I take any notice of the polls. There's only one poll I'm interested in and that's the one on election day. And I've won two of those."

The interviewer told Mrs Thatcher she had been portrayed as "tough, credible and honest, but also bossy, dictatorial and Right-wing." Did she argue with that?

Rapid expansion

"It's not for me to judge myself," she replied. "I leave you to judge whether they're true or not. I can't say what I'm like. I can only know that it took me about 60 years to develop this style, and I can't change it now."

Questioned on Britain's economy, she acknowledged the problem of unemployment in Britain as well as in other European countries and expressed she bewilderment about the way the American economy had recovered.

"The difference between the United States and Europe is you have a very rapid rate of promotion of small businesses, new businesses and expansion," she said. The new business generated was able to take up the unemployed more quickly than it did in Britain.

Mrs Thatcher said that in her White House talks she intended to tell President Reagan of her concern that the strong dollar was hurting the rest of the world's economies, but that she had no specific remedies to offer.

She would tell Mr Reagan that if the dollar "goes on this way," it could have troublesome consequences, even in the long run for the United States economy.

She was fully in support of research into Mr Reagan's proposed space-based missile defence system ,which would serve to keep a balance with the Russians' own research in the field.

Mrs Thatcher addressing a joint session of Congress in Washington yesterday. Behind her is Vice-President George Bush.

Congress told of Europe's new dawn

IN the course of her speech to a joint meeting of the United States Congress Mrs Thatcher said:

No one of my generation can forget that America has been the principal architect of a peace in Europe which has lasted 41 years. Given this shield of the United States, we have been granted the opportunities to build a concept of Europe beyond the dreams of our fathers: a Europe which seemed unattainable amid the mud and slaughter of the First World War and the suffering and sacrifice of the Second.

For our deliverance from what might have befallen us, I would not have us leave our gratitude to the tributes of history.

The debt the free peoples of Europe owe to a nation generous with its bounty, willing to share its strength, seeking to protect the weak, is incalculable. We thank and salute you.

There have been disappointments as well as hopes fulfilled, the continued troubles in the Middle East, famine and oppression in Africa, genocide in South-East Asia, the brutal occupation of Afghanistan, the undiminished agony of tortured Poland, and above all the continued and continuing division of the European continent.

From these shores it may seem to some of you that by comparison with the risks and sacrifices which America has borne through four decades, and the courage with which you have shouldered unwanted burdens, Europe has not fully matched your expectations.

Bear with me if I dwell for a moment on the Europe to which we now belong. We who are alive today have passed through perhaps the greatest transformation on the continent of Europe since the fall of Rome.

To that swift and historic change Europe has had to find a response.

It has not been an easy passage, to blend this conflux of nationalism, patriotism, sovereignty, into a European community. Yet I think that our children and grandchildren may see these birth pangs of a new Europe more clearly.

They will see it as a visionary chapter in the creation of a Europe able to share the load alongside you.

Do not doubt the firmness of our resolve. But don't underestimate what we already do.

Today, out of the forces of the Alliance in Europe, 95 per cent. of the divisions, 85 per cent. of the tanks, 80 per cent. of the combat aircraft and 70 per cent. of the fighting ships are provided, manned and paid for by the European allies.

Europe has more than three million men under arms and more still in reserve. We have to we are right in the front line.

Weapons not cause of wars

The Soviet Union has never concealed its true aim. In the words of Mr Brezhnev: "The total triumph of socialism all over the world is inevitable. For this triumph . . . we shall struggle with no lack of effort."

Indeed there has been no lack of effort. Contrast this with the record of the west. We do not aim at domination, at hegemony in any part of the world.

Of course we are ready to fight the battle of ideas with all the vigour at our command. But we do not try to impose our system on others.

The Alliance has given a solemn assurance to the world: "None of our weapons will be used except in response to attack."

In talking to the Soviet Union we find great difficulty in getting this message across.

And yet they should remember that when, after the last war, the United States had a monopoly of nuclear weapons, she never once exploited her superiority. No country ever used such great power more responsibly or with such restraint.

I wonder what would have befallen us in Western Europe and Great Britain if that monopoly had been in Soviet hands.

Mr Speaker, wars are not caused by the build-up of weapons. They are caused when an aggressor believes he can achieve his objectives at an acceptable price.

Our task is to see that potential aggressors from whatever quarter understand plainly that the capacity and the resolve of the West would deny them victory in war; and that the price they would pay would be intolerable.

That is the basis of deterrence. It is the same, whatever the nature of the weapons. Our task is not only to prevent nuclear war, but conventional war as well.

It is essential that our research and capacity do not fall behind. That is why I firmly support President Reagan's decision to pursue research into defence against ballistic nuclear missiles—the Strategic Defence Initiative.

Indeed I hope that our own scientists will share in this research.

We shall have to resist the muddled arguments of those who have been induced to believe that Russia's intentions are benign and that ours are suspect, or who would have us simply give up our defences in the hope that where we led others would follow.

Let us be under no illusions: it is our strength, not their goodwill, that has brought the Soviet Union to the negotiating table in Geneva.

U.S. efforts to reduce deficit

The current strength of the dollar, which is causing so much difficulty for some of your industries, creates obvious pressures for "special cases," for new trade barriers to a free market. I am certain that your Administration is right to resist such pressures.

To give in to them would betray the millions in the developing world, to say nothing of the strains on your other trading partners. The developing countries need our markets, as we need theirs.

We cannot preach economic adjustment to them, and refuse to practise it at home.

Second, the way in which we in the developed countries manage our economies determines whether the world's financial framework is stable, determines the level of interest rates, determines the amount of capital available for sound investment the world over, determines whether or not the poor countries can service their past loans, let alone compete for new ones.

Those are the reasons why we support so strongly your efforts to reduce your budget deficit.

We in Europe have watched with admiration the burgeoning of this mighty American economy. There is a new mood in the United States.

Many of the policies you are following are the policies we are following.

You have brought inflation down. So have we. You have declared war on regulations and controls on enterprise. So have we.

Our civil service is now smaller than at any time since the war. Controls on pay, prices, dividends, foreign exchange — are all gone.

You have encouraged small business, so often the source of tomorrow's jobs. And so have we.

Above all, we are carrying out the largest programme of denationalisation in our history. Just a few years ago in Britain privatisation was thought to be a pipe dream. Now it is a reality, and a popular one.

We have not yet shared your success in bringing down unemployment, although we are creating many new jobs. But output, investment and standard of living are all at record levels.

And the pound—it is too low. But whatever the proper international level of sterling, it is a marvellous time for Americans not only to visit Britain, but to invest with us.

And many are. America is by far the largest direct investor in Britain: and I am delighted to say that Britain is the largest direct investor in the United States.

So the British economy has an underlying strength. And, like you, we use our strength and resolve to carry out our duties to our allies and to the wider world.

We were the first country to station cruise missiles on our territory. Britain led the rest.

In proportion to our population we station the same number of troops as you in Germany.

In Central America we keep troops stationed in Belize at that Government's request. That is our contribution to sustaining democracy in a part of the world so vital to the United States.

We have troops in Cyprus and in the South Atlantic and a small force in the Sinai at your request. British servicemen are now in secondment to some 50 foreign countries.

We were alongside you in Beirut. We work with you in the Atlantic and in the Indian Oceans. Our Navy is on duty across the world.

Britain meets her responsibilities for the defence of freedom throughout the world. She will go on doing so.

Gunmen will not succeed

Both our countries have suffered at the hands of terrorists. We have lost some of our best young lives, and I have lost some close and dear friends.

Free, strong, democratic societies will not be driven by gunmen to abandon freedom or democracy.

The problems of the Middle East will not be solved by the cold-blooded murder of American Servicemen in Lebanon, or by the murder of American civilians on a hijacked aircraft. Nor will the problems of Northern Ireland be solved by the assassin's gun or bomb.

Gareth FitzGerald and I and our respective governments are united in condemning terrorism.

We recognise the differing traditions and identities of the two parts of the community in Northern Ireland, the Nationalists and the Unionist. We seek a political way forward acceptable to them both and which respects them both.

So long as a majority of the people of Northern Ireland wish to remain part of the United Kingdom, their wishes will be respected. If ever there were to be a majority in favour of change, then I believe that our Parliament would respond accordingly.

For that is the principle of consent, enshrined in your constitution and an essential part of ours.

There is no disagreement on this principle between the United Kingdom Government and the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Be under no illusions about the provisional I R A. They terrorise their own communities. They are the enemies of democracy, and of freedom too.

Do not just take my word for it. Ask the people of the Irish Republic—where it is an offence even to belong to that organisation—or their elected Government in Dublin.

I recognise and appreciate the efforts which have been made by Administration and Congress alike to bring home this message to American citizens who may be misled into making contributions to seemingly innocuous groups.

The fact is that money is used to buy the deaths of Irishmen, north and south of the border — and 70 per cent. of those killed by the I R A are Irishmen—and even the killing and wounding of American citizens visiting our country.

Garret FitzGerald and I will continue to consult together in the quest for stability and peace in Northern Ireland. We hope we will have your continued support for our joint efforts to find a way forward.—A P.

Computer to control ships hit in war

By DESMOND WETTERN Naval Correspondent

THE Navy is studying a new system to speed up measures to mitigate the effects of bomb, missile or torpedo damage in warships.

Based partly on lessons learned in the Falklands as well as both American and Russian experiences in the 1939-45 war, the heart of the system is a small computer that calculates in a few minutes the effects of flooding.

It will indicate what compartments should be counter-flooded to maintain stability and what areas will need emergency strengthening.

The system, designed by a reserve officer working for a Massachusetts computer company, has been tested on board the 51,000-ton American carrier Midway after two supposed hits from Exocet missiles had flooded 50 compartments, and it is now being evaluated on board other American ships.

Five minutes

The computer system in the Midway took five minutes to assess the damage and a further five minutes to show what kind of measures should be taken.

The incident was then re-enacted without using the computer system and the process took eight hours.

Known as "Ballast" (Balanced Loading via Automated Stability and Trim System) it was developed from a system used in some tankers and ore carriers to ensure stability during loading cargo and has aroused considerable interest among Royal Navy officers with experience in the Falklands, not only as an aid to damage control, but also to help in assessing the affects on stability of unusually heavy loads.

AFTER QUANGOS—NOW THE QUALGO PLAGUE

By JOHN GRIGSBY Local Government Correspondent

MANY so-called "voluntary bodies" now engage in extreme Left wing activities paid for by the ratepayers, according to a report published yesterday by the Centre for Policy Studies.

The authors have coined the word qualgo (quasi-autonomous local government organisation) to distinguish the bodies from the quango (quasi-autonomous national government organisation).

They say in the report, "Qualges Just Grow," that their techniques are so effective that it makes little difference which political party is in control of any given local council.

"Through their network of pressure groups they can generally persuade even the most deep-dyed Conservative councils to continue to fund the operations."

The authors of the report are Teresa Gorman, a Westminster councillor; Barbara Robson, former chairman of the Islington Ratepayers Association; Bernard Sharpe, director of the Spastics Society; and Cyril Taylor, deputy opposition leader on the G L C.

Furthering their own aims

The Departments of Environment and Health and Social Security and the Home Office all also release large funds to organisations which have been given the status of qualgoes by local councils. Mr Taylor said: "Taking into account the Greater London Enterprise Board, we estimate that £100m million to £150 million of ratepayers' money alone is going into these bodies."

The report says: "Many of those who control and run qualgoes are in a good position to use their client groups in order to further their own political aims.

"For example, within days of the White Paper calling for public comment on the proposal to abolish the metropolitan counties, hundreds of protests, clearly based on briefs supplied by G L C staff, were received in Whitehall from qualgo members and clients."

They can also use their influence in the marginal political areas where they are often concentrated.

Much of the explanation, say the authors, lies in the manipulation of the word "voluntary". Local councils using their right under Section 137 of the 1972 Local Government Act have "grossly muddied" the concept of "voluntary" work.

They say: "The middle-class Tory lady once so dedicated a worker for charity has been elbowed out by ridicule, snubbing and such unacceptable demands upon her time as obligatory attendance at training classes."

£16,000 fo Babies Against the Bomb

The section allows councils to use the product of a 2p rate for spending in the interests of the inhabitants to fund charities and anybody providing a public service. In the G L C area, £59 million is raised under this section.

As well as the funding of the Greater London Enterprise Board, Babies Against the Bomb received £1,600, the Chile Democratico (G B) £6,902, and the Gay Police Monitoring Group £17,616 and Brent Trades Council £55,000.

Among examples given in the report are:

THE GREATER LONDON ENTERPRISE BOARD, which has received £75 million of ratepayers' money over the last two years. The authors say that the GLC has lent GLEB nearly £14 million in mortgages to buy 28 sites from the council.

"This is tantamount to a transfer of assets which belong to London's ratepayers to an unaccountable private company."

THE CITIZENS ADVICE BUREAUX. The National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux passes only a quarter of the money it receives from central and local government to the boards, according to the report of a commission under Sir Douglas Lovelock. Much of the rest, say the authors, is used for overtly political ends.

The Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service complained that the N A C A B was biased against employers at industrial tribunals, while the Small Landlords Association complained of its attitude to their members. Candidates to become bureaux workers complained they had been rejected on political grounds.

Keeping it in the family

ISLINGTON COUNCIL, where the authors allege that a complicated family nexus between council and quangoes has grown up with surprising ease and complete legality.

"Husbands, wives, mothers and fathers-in-law, brothers and sisters serve on the council and work in paid positions in housing associations, community service projects and so forth."

In one case, the chairman of a committee negotiated with his own brother for staff increases which resulted in £750,000 worth of extra spending.

WESTMINSTER CITY COUNCIL, which shows that not even a Tory authority is immune. The Paddington Law Centre, funded by the council, showed in its minutes that it was actively supporting the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament.

The Centre for Policy Studies will submit a copy of the report to the committee of inquiry chaired by Mr David Widdicombe, Q.C., into the conduct of local government.

It recommends that Section 137 should be amended to forbid the payment of ratepayers' money to anybody which has wholly or partly political aims. It also recommends that every applicant for a grant should show that he represents a registered charity which receives at least 25 per cent of its operating costs from sources other than ratepayers' funds.

The Department of Health should report annually on the operations of the Citizens Advice Bureaux and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux.

Before decisions are taken on any request for grant, councillors should be required to declare their interests, both direct and indirect. The law should be amended to forbid any full-time paid officer of a council from standing for election to any council.

RETRIAL ON £¼m LIBEL DAMAGES

AN award of £250,000 exemplary damages against the NEWS OF THE WORLD in favour of 10 policemen falsely accused in a front page story of being rapists, was set aside by there judges in the Appeal Court yesterday.

The court unanimously ordered a retrial on the issue of exemplary damages, which were the highest ever awarded against a newspaper for libel in England.

The 10 men had also been awarded £500 each in compensation. This will stand.

The entire male C I D section stationed at Banbury, Oxfordshire, in 1978 had sued NEWS GROUP NEWSPAPERS over a July, 1978 "exclusive" which accused them of rape, assault and blackmail.

The accusations were made by David Brain who, at the time of publication, was holding hostages at gunpoint in the nearby village of North Aston.

Brain had written to the NEWS OF THE WORLD, claiming that Banbury C I D had raped and beaten his wife and threatened his five-year-old son

During the libel trial, the 10 policemen told the jury that a cloud of suspicion hung over them in the aftermath of the five-and-a-half-day siege. The NEWS OF THE WORLD denied libel.

Serious misdirection

Lord Justice STEPHENSON said yesterday: "I cannot myself see how 12 reasonable men and women could have thought it reasonable to impose so heavy a penalty, even on the proprietors and publishers of a newspaper with an immense circulation, in order to mark public disapproval of their conduct."

He said that the trial judge, Mr Justice Comyn, had given an impeccable direction on compensatory damages, but there had been substantial and serious misdirection on exemplary damages.

"I am not satisfied that the jury intended to award more than £25,000 by way of exemplary damages."

The policemen, none of whom was mentioned by name in the NEWS OF THE WORLD story were: Chief Insp JOHN RICHES; Insp ROGER NICKLIN; Sergeants ERIC WOODHOUSE and TERENCE JONES, and Constables NEVILLE HALFORD, NORL BRION, MICHAEL LOVELL, RAYMOND BROWN, ALAN PARTRIDGE and STEPHEN HONEY.

Settlement opportunity

OUR LEGAL CORRESPONDENT writes: Unless there is now an out of court settlement on the ememplary damages the issue will be reheard by a jury. Both sides would need to agree for the issue to be determined by a judge without a jury.

Wrangle over bird island

By GEORGE TURNBULL

OVERTURES are to be made to the Government in an effort to seek the return of the Calf of Man, which for nearly 50 years has been a little bit of England, to Manx ownership.

The 616-acre island at the southern tip of the Oom, now an important link in the chain of bird observatories, has been owned by the National Trust since 1957.

The Calf was donated to the trust as a deed of gift by a Lancashire businessman "to be preserved for ever" after Tynwald, the Manx Government decided not to take it over from private ownership.

It was not until 1951 that the Manx National Trust was created and then its mainland counterpart agreed to let the Calf for a nominal rent of £1 a year. The rent has never been collected.

Talks about the restoration of ownership to the Isle of Man took place in 1951 and again in 1975 but foundered on the "resolution of inalienability" which debars the trust from island freehold and the problem of breaking faith with the original donor.

Now the Manx Museum and National Trust has requested the Manx Government to ask the British Government if it would consider passing legislation to get over the problem of inalienability.

The Manx branch of the Celtic League is also involved in a much more nationalistic campaign for the return of the Calf and believes all problems are surmountable.

'BLACKS' REPORT JUSTIFIED

IT was justifiable for a newspaper to mention the colour of a gang of black youths who robbed white passengers in a tube train after the Notting Hill Carnival, the Press Council said yesterday.

The council rejected a complaint by Mr R. Crosskey, of Bracewell Road, North Kensington, that it was improper of the KENSINGTON NEWS AND POST to identify a gang of thieves as black and their victims as white when colour had no bearing on the story.

Mr Crosskey complained about a report by Mr Chris Birkett who was one of at least five people in one carriage robbed with a knife pressed to his chin.

Mr Crosskey said the clear identification of the gang as black youths breached National Union of Journalists' guidelines in identifying people of one particular colour when this had no bearing on the content of the story. This was seriously exacerbated by identifying all the victims as white.

The group editor, Mr M. Wilson, replied that he disagreed with Mr Crosskey's view that the report was racist or a "journalistic smear." The reporter was telling what he actually saw.

Mr Birkett said that as a chapel official he took the N U J guidelines seriously.

The Press Council's adjudication was: "The Press Council has ruled many times that people's race or colour should only be used in newspaper reports where it is relevant to the story being told.

"In this case publication of it was justified in two respects. The fact that it was a gang of black youths who robbed white passengers in a tube train was relevant to the story about an aftermath to the Notting Hill Carnival which is directly concerned with the expression of ethnic consciousness and racial harmony.

"Additionaly describing them as black was relevant in helping to identify the criminals for whom the police were searching."

The complaint was rejected.

More dogs to seek out jail drugs

By T. A. SANDROCK
Crime Correspondent

THE increase in drug smuggling into prisons has led the Prison Service to introduce more dogs trained to sniff out narcotics.

So far this year 12 extra dogs, bringing the Prison Service total to 40, have been trained in detection techniques, enabling them to trace drugs of all types.

The dogs were trained at the Durham Police Training School. More animals are being selected and will start their training next month.

An "urgent" inquiry was ordered by the Home Office Prison Department in December after prison officers disclosed brutality and drug abuse at Finnemore Wood youth custody centre near Marlow, Buckinghamshire.

Liberal regimes

The Prison Officers Association has complained for some years that staff shortages and more liberal regimes, easing restrictions on visitors' searches, are making it more difficult to contain the problem.

Drug "barons" have taken over from tobacco barons in prisons, and some prisoners are becoming addicts.

It is known that some long-term and security risk prisoners, including terrorists, are leading other prisoners into addiction and using them to stir up fights and riots.

The Prison Department has expressed its "serious concern" over the problem and has stated it is introducing "counter measures." Increasing the number of dogs trained to trace drugs is one of these.

Currently, "sniffer" dogs are kept at the 24 prisons. As many dogs as are thought necessary are brought together for special searches of individual prisons. These searches could last two or three days.

In the 12 months ending in November last year there were 57 such special searches, with drugs being found in 41 of these.

CRASH MAN TO KEEP £90,000 FOR RUINED SEX LIFE

An award of £90,000 damages to Mr Jonathan Kelly, 24, a computer operator whose sex life was ruined by injuries received in a car crash in September 1977, was upheld by three judges in the Appeal Court yesterday. With interest and expenses, the award is now worth £102,102.

Lord Justice Parker said it was "fair and moderate compensation," and Mr Justice Park said: "From being a healthy athletic virile young man, he has been reduced to a shambling, impotent being." Lord Justice Stephenson sat with them.

Mr Kelly, of Darwin Court, Gloucester Avenue, Camden, fractured his spine in the crash. The driver, Mr Leslie Evans of Finchley Road, Golders Green had his appeal dismissed with costs and was refused leave to appeal to the House of Lords.

INQUEST OPENS ON ACTRESS

The inquest on the actress Eva Mottley, star of the T V series "Widows," who was found dead on St Valentine's Day, was opened and adjourned at Westminster coroner's court yesterday.

Miss Mottley, 31, former girlfriend of rock star David Bowie, was found dead in her flat at Shirland Road, Maida Vale.

HUNT FOR NURSES

With more than 110 vacancies for nurses, South Derbyshire Health Authority is being forced to advertise as far afield as Scotland and Ireland in its recruitment drive.

D-I-Y TEST FOR PREGNANCY '99pc RELIABLE'

A do-it-yourself pregnancy test called "Predictor Colour" which involves testing an early morning urine sample, was launched yesterday with claims that the results are more than 99 per cent. reliable.

It is designed to give a test within four days of a missed period. In a positive test, the testing fluid changes from magenta to almost colourless in a few minutes. If there is no colour change within 30 minutes, the test is negative.

The test, which costs £5·95, was invented by Prof. Geoffrey Chamberlain, of St George's Hospital Medical School, and Prof. Jan Leuvring, of Holland, and is manufactured by Chefaro Proprietics.

GREY DAY FOR FINED FARMER

Abdul Karim, 40, a farmer, of Crich Lane, Nether Heage, Derbyshire, was fined £100 with £100 costs yesterday by Ilkeston magistrates, for failing to paint the blue polythene roof of his new chicken shed grey.

Karim admitted failing to comply with planning rules. Mr Philip Bloore, for Amber Valley council, said: "The colour grey is a condition for most farm buildings so they don't spoil the rural view."

TEA-BREAK SNATCH

An unnamed South Wales gems dealer, on a regular trip, was robbed of jewellery worth £60,000 yesterday while having a tea break at a Bristol cafe. Police said the specially-adapted Vauxhall was stolen in a "meticulously - planned crime."

SKUNK SPRAY TO FIGHT OFF ATTACKERS

A marathon enthusiast, Jack Scaff, and a Wisconsin skunk farmer, Ray Hanson, will soon be selling an aerosol spray emitting a foul odour to help runners scare away would-be muggers and rapists.

After Scaff witnessed an attempted attack on his wife while they were running, he contacted Hanson, who then was marketing an aerosol spray used by hunters and nature photographers to mask their human odour.

"The product Ray was marketing really wasn't strong enough," Scaff said. The two have since come up with a 25 per cent. strength skunk-spray solution, and those who have smelled it say it has the worst odour imaginable.—U P I.

BRIDGE REPAIRS

Strengthening the Severn Bridge is expected to take five or six years to complete, Mr Lynda Chalker, Transport Minister of State, said in a Commons written reply yesterday. The work will cost about £35 million.

HONOURABLE SIR: BRING A MINDER —WE'RE FIRING YOU

By DAVID GRAVES

THE Japanese electrical giant. Hitachi, explained yesterday why the 30 British staff who were given instant redundancy this month were required to be accompanied by a minder when summoned to hear their fate.

"Sometimes," said a spokesman, "when someone loses their job there is a tendency for them to become difficult to manage and over-emotional."

Therefore the middle managers and sales staff invited into a director's room at Hitachi's offices in Hayes, Middlesex, were accompanied by an escort equipped with instructions entitled: "Procedures for Minders."

The minder would be "a friend or colleauge."

Nevertheless, the procedures for the friend or colleague were quite explicit.

"Report immediately when called. Be as reasonable and as friendly as possible. Ensure that company property is not removed.

No hanging about

"Advise (Mr/s .....) that the person has left the premises. If required, please contact security."

The spokesman stressed that the thirty—axed because of cutbacks in the consumer electrical market—were given "fairly generous" redundancy.

And contrary to some reports they were not escorted in at 10 minute intervals to hear their fate. Each was given at least a 45-minute interview to be told he was out of a job.

The 30 were also allowed to return to their offices later to say their goodbyes and have farewell drinks.

Hitachi's rather unusual style of industrial relations first hit the headlines last December when it invited over-35s at its South Wales colour television factory near Aberdare, to take voluntary redundancy.

Over 35s, the company explained in a circular, were slower, more prone to sickness, had poorer eyesight and were more resistant to change.

The idea was to create job opportunities for school-leavers. Ironically, more people applied for redundancy under the scheme than the company were prepared to let go.

BUS FACTORY CLOSED BY BL IS REVIVED

By Our Transport Correspondent

A bus factory closed by British Leyland last autumn has re-opened after being taken over by an employee consortium led by its former manager.

Charles H. Roe, of Leeds, has been re-born as Optare, backed by West Yorkshire County Council and West Essex Enterprise Board.

Mr Russell Richardson, manager from 1979 to 1981, has returned as managing director. It is recruiting 50 people and hopes to raise the total to 250 within three years.

Minimum wage sought by TGWU

By Our Industrial Staff

THE Transport and General Workers Union launched a drive yesterday for a £100-a-week minimum wage.

The union, with 1,500,000 members in virtually every sector of the economy, will tell its negotiators to put the £100 figure in its sights for all future pay talks.

Among those earning below £100 the union has picked out workers in hotels and in catering, in textiles, agriculture, food manufacturing, shops and cleaning. Women make up 75 per cent. of those earning below £100, according to the union.

Rallies planned

At the launch of the campaign, which will include rallies, exhibitions and a recruitment drive among the low paid, Mr Roy Hattersley, deputy leader of the Labour party, said poorer paid workers should be given bigger annual pay rises than the better off.

"We will not eliminate low pay if a 10 per cent. rise for the lowest paid in British Oxygen is matched by a 10 per cent. rise for its chairman," he said.

He said the Government should discriminate against firms paying low wages when it was awarding public sector contracts, although he did not say what level of minimum wage he was proposing.

"Firms seeking to exploit workers should lose out in the market for Government contracts," he said.

BBC programmes to aid jobless

By ROBIN STRINGER
TV and Radio Correspondent

A SERIES of television and radio programmes designed to help the unemployed was announced yesterday by B B C Education.

They will attempt to tackle the problems of coping with home and married life while suggesting ways of turning hobbies into jobs and looking at schemes for the jobless.

The programmes will be part of the system's £25 million annual output, which produces 2,000 hours of television and 1,700 of radio.

Also, they will be in line with a reorganisation of the department's five sections to work as "a combined task force" providing a range of programmes and supporting services in key subject areas.

Responsible for the reorganisation is Sheila Innes, Controller of Educational Broadcasting.

"We will be presenting new programmes dealing with the effects of industrial change on both large companies and the individual.

"From businesses that have bounced back from possible bankruptcy to the problems of alcoholism and its special relevance to the unemployed.

"And we will continue to cater for significant minorities with programmes for different ethnic groups and new series looking at the difficulties faced by the elderly and disabled," she declared.

Among the programmes will be "Using Unemployment in which Chris Searle will offer suggestions to sixth formers about community work and a creative use of leisure time.

"Workforce," with Brian Redhead, will look at schemes to help the unemployed and in "Recovery" he will visit traditional manufacturing companies that have been close to bankruptcy and tell how they survived.

Launching the line-up Mr Alasdair Milne, the corporation's director-general said its educational broadcasting resources were uniquely placed to help people come to terms with unemployment.

Divorce rates

"Inescapably, unemployment is a major problem facing our society and, with more than three million out of work and many young people uncertain whether they will ever have a job, the B B C clearly has a duty to do all it can to help tackle this problem in a positive way," he said.

Miss Innes pointed out that the divorce rates among the unemployed were now double those for the working population and 48 per cent. of young unemployed men were heavy drinkers.

In the programmes Dr Michael O'Donnell will be looking at the effects of alcoholism on the individual while Lenny Henry, the comedian, will examine the problems of racism in "Wavelength" on school radio and, on television, "Scene" will deal with bereavement.

"Technology and the Handicapped" will show how micro-technology can help the disabled and those who work with them.

CRUELTY CASES A RECORD FOR R S P C A

The number of cruelty cases dealt with by the R S P C A last year was the highest in its 161-year history, it announced yesterday. For the first time telephone calls from the public to the society's 226 inspectors in England and Wales topped a million.

Convictions in court cases brought by the R S P C A reached a post-war record of 1,889-552 up on 1983. Twenty-two people were jailed and 11 were given suspended prison sentences.

Most cases involved cruelty to dogs, but the society's inspectorate branch said the increase in prosecutions was largely due to greater success in detecting offences involving wild birds.

DERBY PITS FACE DECLINE

Only three or four of North Derbyshire's nine collieries could be working by the end of the century as coal reserves run out, Mr Ted Horton, Coal Board area deputy director, told representatives of colliery management and supervisory unions at Bolsover, yesterday.

Later Mr Horton stressed pit closures would be through exhaustion of reserves and not on economic grounds. He pledged no compulsory redundancies.

ARMED MINER JAILED

A working Nottinghamshire miner said to have carried out an attempted robbery with an air pistol and sheath knife because he needed money, was jailed for two years and nine months at Nottingham High Court yesterday.

Andrew Timmons, 28, of Chesterfield Road North, Pleasley, Mansfield, a miner at Shirebrook Colliery, Derbyshire, was said to have been drinking heavily before donning a mask and going just before midnight to the home of a couple with five children.

COLD PIT ROW ENDS

Rawdon Colliery in North Leicestershire was said to be back to normal production yesterday after talks between the Coal Board and about half the miners employed underground, who had staged a one-day strike in protest at freezing conditions. The pit is 1,300 feet deep.

'LOVE-TUG' ARREST ORDER

A WARRANT was issued yesterday for the arrest of a man who has fled to America with his four-year-old daughter in the first case under the new Child Abduction Act.

The Director of Public Prosecution began proceedings at Newbury magistrates' court which will be watched with interest by parents involved in the so-called "love-tug" tangles over children.

Under the terms of the divorce, the couple had joint custody of Kelly, their only child, but Mrs Boyd was granted day-to-day care and control.

'Flew to America'

Her ex-husband was allowed to pick up Kelly on Saturdays from Mrs Boyd's home in Abbey Close, Newbury, on condition he returned her on Sunday evenings.

It is alleged that he collected Kelly on Dec 7 last year and flew with her from Gatwick to Newark, New Jersey. They now live in New York.

Mr RICHARD MORGAN, for the Director of Public Prosecutions, said after the hearing, that papers would now be sent through diplomatic channels to the United States.

He added: "Under the treaty we have with the U.S., we would expect the American authorities to begin proceedings leading to the extradition of Mr Boyd and his return to Britain."

The Child Abduction Act, which became law last October, is specifically designed to stop a parent taking a child out of the country against the other's wishes. There is a maximum penalty of seven years' imprisonment.

FINED JP 'WILL NOT RESIGN'

A magistrate fined £75 yesterday for obstructing a police inspector on a picket line said he would not resign. Owen Granfield, 32, a member of the Northampton bench, said after the case: "They will have to sack me. This has been a show trial, a joke."

Rugby magistrates heard the offence took place outside the Rolls-Royce plant at Ansty, Warwickshire, during a pay dispute. Also accused was borough councillor Kevin Hill, 29, who was found guilty of using words and behaviour likely to cause a breach of the peace and obstructing the highway and fined £100.

Changes in extradition laws sought

By TERENCE SHAW
Legal Correspondent

FAR reaching changes in the extradition laws to prevent the United Kingdom becoming a haven for international criminals are suggested by the Government in a Green Paper published yesterday.

In its proposals on which it is seeking comment and criticism before deciding on any necessary legislation, the Government wants to relax some of the present technical legal requirements and safeguards that now make it difficult for foreign states to get back alleged fugitive offenders in Britain.

Its main suggestion is that the courts in England and Wales should no longer have to be satisfied that there is a prima facie case against a defendant before ordering extradition. It also wants to see some relaxation of the strict rules of evidence required by the courts.

Another proposal is that there should no longer be a list of specific extraditable offences laid down in extradition treaties but that extradition should be available for any offence carrying a maximum jail sentence of at least a year.

Fugitive criminals

Fiscal offences, which are not now among the list of extraditable offences under the 1870 Extradition Act, would no longer be excluded.

Some relaxation of the rule that a fugitive criminal should not be tried for any offence other than that for which he was extradited is also suggested.

Explaining the need for changes to the present law based on the 1870 Extradition Act, the Government says that recent years have witnessed "a substanial expansion in international crime, such as drug trafficking, international fraud and in particular terrorism."

The number of applications for extradition has increased and the need to ensure that criminals do not escape justice by crossing international boundaries has become more pressing.

Safe haven

It was clear that parts of our law and practice and in particular the requirement for the foreign state to make out a prima facie case against the fugitive criminal, did not "fit in easily" with those of many countries with which Britain would wish to have extradition arrangements.

"Our requirements should not place such obstacles in the way of returning fugitives to justice that the United Kingdom becomes a safe haven for criminals," says the Green Paper.

But the United Kingdom was now "widely regarded as one of the most difficult countries from which to secure extradition."

About a third of extradition applications failed often because of the inability of the requesting state to satisfy the prima facie case" requirement.

While changing the law as proposed in the Green Paper would probably increase the number of cases in which offenders were extradited to foreign countries, because extradition was founded on the basis of reciprocity, foreign countries were more likely to return wanted criminals to Britain.

An accountant balancing the books in the back of a cab between Highgate and Kensington.

How come it's easier to balance the world's most portable, powerful computer than it is to balance any financial ledger you can think of?

Ah well, the world's most portable, powerful computer is the Epson PX-8. It's only 1½ inches deep and no larger than an A4 sheet of paper.

All it weighs is 4lbs or so. (Pick up a couple of bottles of wine to get an idea of how heavy that isn't.)

More importantly, consider that the Epson PX-8 can do almost anything a desk top computer can do for an Accountant.

That means coping with profit and loss projection, cash flow, balance sheets payroll and all the other things you use a computer for every day.

It can do all that wherever you want it to because it runs on rechargeable batteries (for 20 hours non-stop).

It also runs off the mains at home or in the office.

So if you're working out a complete accounting package for a client, say, you can actually do the job on his premises just by turning up with your PX-8.

Or, if you've already done some work for the business and gone along to present it, having the

Epson PX-8 with you means you can take care of any questions or alterations to the plan, right there and then.

Like any ordinary micro, the Epson PX-8 handles all your business correspondence, reports, documents and all your record keeping.

It will even keep your diary for you. You tell the PX-8 what your appointments are and it will tell you when they're about to occur, through a series of alarms.

Spend £798 (+VAT) and you can put an Epson PX-8 in your briefcase. It comes complete with all the software you need to do everything we've described.

Look around. Nothing like it exists for that kind of money.

Should you be stuck in a traffic jam in the Cromwell Road or wherever right now, use the time profitably.

Keep your eyes open for a phone box, then ring 01-200 0200 and ask for more information on the Epson PX-8 portable computer and details of where you can buy one.

PEERS BACK CALL FOR DISABILITY COUNCIL

By WALTER ABURN Parliamentary Staff

A PROPOSAL to seek a Royal Charter for the establishment of a Disability Council won overwhelming support in the Lords yesterday when it was put forward by Lord HENDERSON of BROMPTON (Ind.).

Lord GLENARTHUR, Health and Social Security Under-Secretary, said that the Government had an open mind on the subject.

Lord HENDERSON, former Clerk of the Parliaments, argued that issues concerning the disabled should normally be above the party political battle.

Organisations which cared for them should combine to provide a central body with the prestige and influence to take initiatives on a country-wide basis independent of government.

He advocated a review of all resources for the care of the disabled provided by central and local government, charitable bodies and the business world.

These had never been quantified.

Speaking from her wheelchair Baroness LANE-FOX (C) saw advantages in having a central launchpad and clearing house to serve the voluntary bodies.

'Bingo age'

Its existence would be a means of helping those solitary individuals still left out of the system who were ignorant of help available to them.

Backing Lord Henderson's plea for a national lottery to supplement existing resources, she said that "in this bingo age it is hard to see why profits should not sometimes be channelled directly to worthwhile causes."

Lord BANCROFT (Ind) said the status quo in care for the disabled was good hearted but a long way short of enough.

A council established by Royal Charter would involve a minimum of party politics both to establish and run and its overheads would be small.

It would operate at a long arm's length from the Government and provide for non political continuity in care for the disabled both national and international.

It could fill the existing gap without crowding out the many admirable international organisations which already existed while perhaps encouraging sensible amalgamations to avoid overlapping. Its job would be both analytical and managerial.

Lord HENDERSON: National lottery could supplement resources.

The Earl of LONGFORD (Lab) voiced his guarded sympathy for the scheme but queried where most peers would be without party politics. There was a need to see such a council was in no way a cushion between Government and local organisations.

Baroness GARDNER of PARKES (C) said the council membership would require careful choosing on merit and not be purely representational. It should not be bureaucratic and should be small enough to be in touch with those it served.

Baroness MASHAM (Ind) said that its mandate should be to echo the views of those with disabilities but not prevent their speaking for themselves.

Earl ATTLEE (Soc Dem) said it was strange to have national institutions for children, animals and the arts but not one to look after the people leas able to look after themselves.

There was need for some central record of all the help available for them.

Earl HAIG (C) said a new body should be a source of work and creativity and not just a talking shop. Its job would be to increase public awareness of need.

Lord FITT (Ind) agreed it was most important to discover the full extent of disability and to co-ordinate the work og womthem more cost effective.

Lord CAMPBELL of CROY (C) called for Government recognition of the need for a national independent body while Lady KINLOSS (Ind) hoped a future council would not be yet another pressure group but a co-ordinating influence.

Lord GLENARTHUR said the Government wished to encourage active participation by disabled people in affairs which affected them.

Open mind

Any new body would need the respect and confidence of existing organisations in the field. Nobody should underestimate what would be a difficult but not an impossible task for it to fulfil.

The Government had an open mind but he had doubts about whether such a wide range of very different work and discussion was required by a single body.

Much detailed work and discussion was required by the Government would listen with sympathy to any proposals which emerged from that process.

Shipping needs being studied

By Our Parliamentary Staff

THREE studies about shipping requirements in the event of war were currently in hand, Lord BRABAZON of TARA, a Government Transport spokesman in the Lords, revealed yesterday.

He said Lloyds sea group consultants were carrying them out into supply and demand needs for bulk carriers, taking account of non-military requirement in time of war, and for general cargo and passenger ships, with a third study to meet defence requirements to 1992.

Lord GRIMOND (Lib.) pointed out that only two new merchant vessels flying the British flag had been laid down since July, apart from replacements following events in the Falklands.

The British flag was becoming known as a flag of inconvenience rather than convenience, he added.

Lord BRABAZON agreed with Lord Chalfont (Ind) that the pregressive decline of the merchant fleet was causing disquiet among those concerned with the country's defence.

Lord SHINWELL (Lab) said that without constructive steps we would no longer be able to claim to be a maritime nation.

Close watch on lie detector tests urged by MPs

By VALERIE ELLIOTT Political Staff

AN all-party group of MPs yesterday spoke out against the use of lie detectors by employers when interviewing job candidates or determining staff promotion prospects.

They judged that reaction to the test could just as well be caused by anger, fear or embarrassment as by guilt, deceit or lying.

But rather than recommend a complete ban on the "polygraph" for screening staff, the MPs have advised the Government to keep its use under review.

They propose the introduction of a strict licensing system and a code of practice should it become used more widely in Britain.

The Commons select committee, which has been examining the likely effect of the lie detector on industrial relations and employment, agreed that it is use would be "undesirable and of insufficient reliability."

"We are in no doubt that the use of the polygraph has unwelcome implications both for employment practice and for the rights of the individual," it said.

None of the 11 MPs on the committee were subjected to the test, but they took evidence from organisations which had used the device to test the honesty and reliability of people.

They concluded that the accuracy of the tests was low and that training in the use of lie detectors was inadequate.

The test would create psychological pressures on individuals conscious of their right to refuse it, and the introduction of a lie detector into an organisation would affect the morale of the workforce, said the MPs.

The polygraph does not actually detect lies but reacts to levels of thoracic breathing, abdominal breathing, blood pressure, rate and strength of pulse and level of perspiration.

Foreign agents

The committee recognised that the polygraph was used in national security and that a pilot scheme was under way at GCHQ, Cheltenham.

But it saw the possibility of training people to beat the test, especially agents for foreign governments.

Mr John Gorst (C., Hendon N.), a committee member, said last night that it should have called for an immediate ban on the use of lie detectors in the private sector.

The report was unanimous, but it was "a unanimous compromise" which failed to deal forthrightly with protecting the rights of the individual—"the most important issue involved."

CLUES TO DECEIT REJECTED

By ADRIAN BERRY Science Correspondent

CUSTOMS officers, detectives, insurance investigators and barristers were no more expert than anyone else at telling whether a person was lying, a team of psychologists said yesterday.

Traditional clues to deceit, like shifty eyes, nervous gestures and stammered speech, did not indicate that someone was lying, the scientists concluded after an elaborate series of tests.

"Most liars can fool most people most of the time," said Prof. Paul Ekman, of the University of California at San Francisco.

In an experiment at Cornell University, New York, in which people either lied or told the truth about whether they were carrying "contraband," customs officers were no better at detecting the "culprits" than college students.

Eyebrow movement

But, Prof. Ekman said, there were certain facial muscles, inherited from the mammal brain which came into existence about 100 million years ago, which revealed hidden emotions of fear, distress and anger, which might accompany deceit.

"Fewer than 15 per cent. of people could control this movement at will," said Prof. Ekman. In most people it happened only when a person felt genuine distress. It could also signal guilt.

Fear showed in another reliable facial signal, the eyebrows being raised and pulled together. "Not a single person we have tested can produce this movement deliberately," said Prof. Ekman.

Another sign of deceit was the feigned smile, which was slightly unsymmetrical. Though both sides of the face made the same movements, the muscles on one side were stronger than the other and yielded a slightly lopsided expression.

Switching of debates angers MPs

By WILLIAM WEEKES Parliamentary Staff

THE Government's decision to take the remaining stages of the London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill a day earlier than planned brought a wave of protests in the Commons yesterday.

The purpose of the Bill is to make the Greater London Council pay a disputed £50 million in grants to London Regional Transport.

It arisese out of a High Court ruling that Mr Ridley, Transport Secretary, had acted in an "unlawful, irrational and procedurally improper manner" over the amount of grant to be paid by the GLC to LRT.

Discussion delayed

Labour MPs sought to exploit to the full the Government's discomfiture at having to rearrange Commons business following a change involving the London Borough of Haringey which caused the debate on ratecapping scheduled for yesterday to be postponed until Monday.

As a result of the rearrangement ,the remaining debate on the London Regional Transport (Amendment) Bill was brought forward to yesterday following the second reading only the night before.

Though opponents succeeded in delaying the start of the discussion, a Government motion to allow the Bill to proceed through to third reading in the sitting was eventually carried by 256 votes to 180, Government majority 70.

Mr Ridley has emphasised the need for the legislation to have a speedy passage through Parliament to give "certainty" to both the GLC and LRT.

'Error in procedure'

But Labour MPs complained bitterly that not enough time was being allowed for proper debate and to table amendments.

Mr Ian Mikardo (Lab, Bow and Poplar) said that in the past Bills had been rushed through only when they had all-party backing and for some compelling reason of state.

There had been an error in procedure and the house was being aske dto carry the can.

Tory criticism

The change in business arrangements arose out of a "botch up" by Mr Jenkin, Environment Secretary.

Stressing the need for urgency, Mr RIDLEY said London Regional Transport would run out of cash later this month if the Bill was not enacted soon.

The GLC had also to fix its rate precept for 1985-86 not later than the first week in March.

Mr Biffen, Leader of the House, was criticised from both sides. Mr PETER GRIFFITHS (C. Portsmouth, N) told him that the procedure being proposed was wrong. The Bill should complete the committee stage and return to the report and third reading later, "tomorrow if necessary."

Mr BIFFEN acknowledged the "deepest unease" on both sides of the House about the proposed procedure. He had been much persuaded by the problems of speed which were implicit in the legislation, he said.

AUSTIN ROVER

In an economy drive, it left 115 cars behind.

In a recent survey of 116 cars carried out by "Company Car Cost Calculator," the Metro City came through as the most economical to buy and run.©

Simply nothing could match its combination of low buying and running costs, and healthy resale value.

Indeed, "What Car?" was moved to say "In City form the Metro is surprisingly civilised and hardly seems like an economy car at all."©

But then style and comfort are very much characteristics of the entire Metro range.

3-Door and 5-Door.

Of the eight 3-door and five 5-door models, each and every one is fitted with soothing cloth upholstery and deep pile carpets.

Each and every one has a new sophisticated one-piece fascia with all controls within easy reach.

Each and every one now sports a new sculpted bonnet and grille for an even more pleasing aerodynamic shape.

Each and every one delivers excellent mpg. The 1.0 HLE will in fact record a staggering 67.6 mpg at 56 mph.

Also common to the entire range is a larger 7.8 gallon tank to lengthen the distance between fuel stops.

And a locking cap that ensures it stays that way.

Economic price.

With all this and more, and prices starting at just £3,846 and stopping at £6,372, the Metro is more than just economic.

It's an economic miracle.

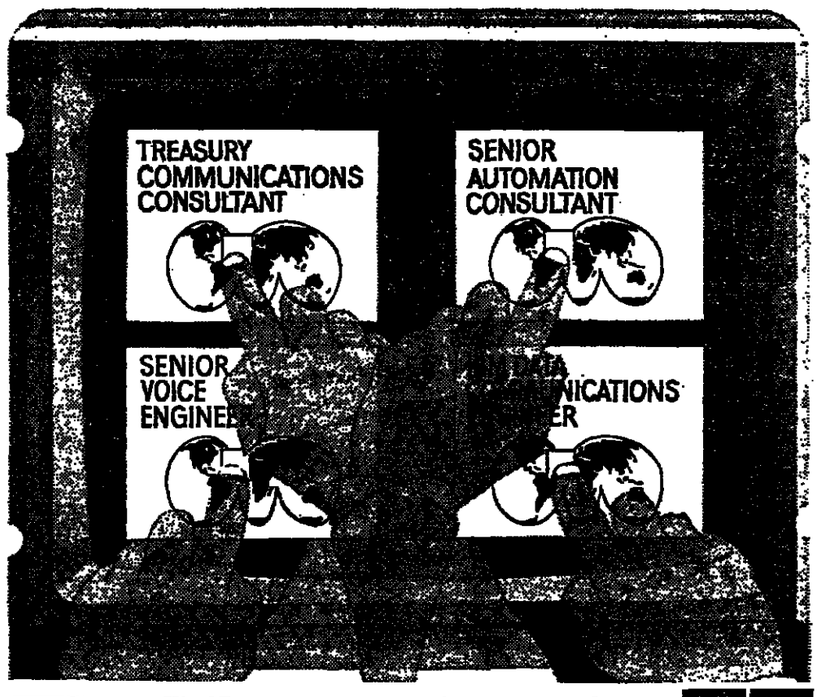
The world of communications at your fingertips



Our client, The Morgan Bank, is acknowledged as one of the world's premier corporate banks. The philosophy of first-class business in a first-class way has built Morgan into a leading international bank and they have an expressed commitment to remaining at the forefront of technology in communications. They are now building up the most advanced Information Delivery Systems in international banking, with the aim of having one integrated network worldwide within the next decade providing services to Morgan offices and clients.

Voice, text and data systems are the responsibility of the London-based International Communications Services Group who work closely with specialists in their New York Head Office. During the past year, Morgan have successfully built up a team of high-calibre communications professionals who have accelerated the development of the project. Therefore, they are now ready to enter phase two of their expansion plan, and wish to recruit a number of key individuals to join the team:

Senior Treasury Communications Consultant

You should have at least 10 years' experience with the ability to manage development projects covering the planning, analysis, design and implementation of Treasury Information Display and Dealing Room telephony systems. You must have an intimate knowledge of information suppliers products and modern transmission, distribution and switching techniques for analogue, video and digital signals.

Senior Automation Consultant

You must have experience of implementing office automation using IBM, Wang or HP hardware and preferably have an in-depth knowledge of large volume document storage/retrieval systems. Sound technical and interpersonal skills are essential. Office Automation is significantly expanding within the Bank and includes personal computing and all aspects of document management (text processing, storage, retrieval and electronic mail) using word processors, personal computers and mini/mainframe hardware. You will implement and support Office Automation Systems for international branches in conjunction with The Morgan Bank's Head Office in New York.

Senior Voice Engineer

You should be a graduate-calibre senior engineer with in-depth knowledge of voice systems, PABX, transmission, switching and signalling systems (digital and analogue). Your experience in communications will include the installation and support of voice systems and networks. Data experience will also be useful. Responsibilities will include support and enhancement of transit switched international voice networks and consultancy to international offices in voice technology.

IBM Data Communications Engineer

You'll need to be thoroughly familiar with Data Communications systems with particular knowledge of IBM communication hardware and software. Responsibilities will include the installation and support of IBM data communications in an international networking environment involving both SNA and private packet switching. You should have HNC, Degree or equivalent in telecommunications, electronics or electrical engineering.

All these positions will involve international travel to Morgan offices worldwide. Future career prospects are outstanding and reflect the investment and importance of The Morgan Bank's commitment to advanced communications systems. These new positions carry highly attractive, negotiable salaries plus valuable fringe benefits which include a mortgage subsidy, a profit sharing bonus, non-contributory pension and life insurance schemes, free medical insurance and access to a subsidised restaurant.

If you relish the challenge of international assignments with one of the pre-eminent names in banking, then send a full C.V. to: David J. Pawley, Executive Selection Division, B.I.S. Applied Systems Ltd., 20 Upper Ground, London SE1 9PD. Or if you prefer, telephone him for an initial discussion in complete confidence on 01-633 0866.

AUSTIN ROVER

MANAGEMENT & MARKETING TRAINING

In the fast moving and challenging world of volume cars Austin Rover have developed a superb technically advanced quality range of vehicles, which are second to none.

This is reflected by the continuing demand for our products— a demand which offers exciting business development opportunities both to the Austin Rover Group and equally importantly to the Company's network of franchised dealers.

To maximise those opportunities it is essential that network personnel receive the very best in terms of training facilities and support. To this end Austin Rover have initiated an exciting new training strategy creating the kind of dynamic environment in which young self motivated training professionals can make their mark.

We are, therefore, looking for the following specialists to join our Training Services Department team based at Studley, in Warwickshire.

TRAINING MANAGERS

An enthusiastic training professional, you will develop and manage courses, conferences and seminars in line with overall training requirements. These training sessions will be conducted at the Austin Rover Group Training Centre at Studley and on Distributor/Dealer premises, regionally and nationally.

You will enjoy presenting and lecturing to large audiences of up to 200 delegates and will have the opportunity to monitor the post course performance of delegates and evaluate and make recommendations relating to course content and structure.

TRAINING SPECIALIST
Interactive Videodisc Programmes

The opportunity to develop an exciting new media does not often present itself— Interactive Videodiscs not only represent the most significant recent advances in audio visual communication but also the 'shape of things to come' in important areas of training.

This appointment will, therefore, be of particular interest to a training specialist with a strong creative flair and a logical approach.

You will help develop and produce a wide range of Interactive Videodisc programmes for Network training and point of sale material.

You will also investigate and make recommendations relating to training needs for both UK and Export markets that can best be met through this medium.

The position is based at Studley and relocation costs to this pleasant part of Warwickshire will be covered where appropriate.

The terms and conditions of employment are particularly attractive, the Training Manager appointments carry a business car, the Training Specialists participate in our management car scheme.

Please write with a detailed Curriculum Vitae indicating current salary to:-

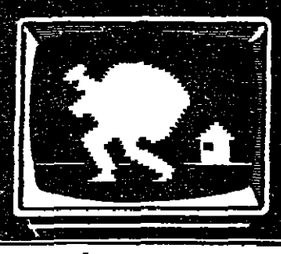
ELECTRONICS HARDWARE SYSTEMS ENGINEER

CHUBB



How wrong you are!

As an established and fast growing part of the Racal Electronics Group, Chubb Alarm Systems Division are amongst the world leaders in integrated computer-controlled systems for alarms, CCTV, surveillance, detection and associated communications. Individual project sizes range from £200K to £6 mill. – many of them overseas.

Aged over 27, you are a mature, qualified (HNC or above) electrical/electronics engineer. Your work at Chubb will embody a broad spectrum of systems engineering duties – from responding to tender and developing specifications through system design, engineering support, design team leadership to commissioning support. Although a sound understanding of logic will be essential, formal software skills are not. Familiarity with the industry would help you but is similarly not compulsory.

However, you will be able to show us sound electrical or electronic system engineering skills in your own field, perhaps gained in industry, public services or a competitive organisation. Whatever your background we can offer you variety, exposure and job interest in an organisation small enough to recognise a big personal contribution, yet big enough to offer real personal growth and career opportunities.

TECHNICAL SALES

High Performance Insulation Products

S.E. England Attractive Salary + Car

Plaschem Ltd, an important member of B.P.B. plc, manufactures a range of rigid foams unsurpassed for their thermal insulation properties and used in building construction and industrial/commercial applications. The products are sold through an established distributor network to specifiers such as local authorities and contractors.

The task of the technical sales representative is to take over and further develop the sales performance of this important territory. Primarily the need is for candidates who are experienced in sales to specifiers of building products.

This is an opportunity to join a progressive organisation who can offer you the combination of large group resources, yet small company warmth and personal professionalism. Ref. 389.

ENGINEERING SALES

Industrial Pipeline Equipment

Surrey Attractive Salary + Car

This is a challenging and rewarding career opportunity.

The company is a large marketing organisation with a national network of distribution depots concerned with the sale of a comprehensive range of industrial pipeline equipment to contractors, local industrial end users and engineering specifiers.

Ideally, you should be aged 25/40 and have an engineering qualification/background, whether design or practical, but most importantly you must have the confidence and personality to identify readily with a broad spectrum of engineering purchasers. A definite advantage would be some industrial sales experience, but this is not absolutely essential as the successful candidate will benefit from thorough training. Ref. 388.

Rewards for both these positions are generous and will include a good salary package, a company car and other attractive fringe benefits. Applicants should write with full career details, or better still, for an immediate confidential discussion, telephone our consultants NOW on 061-833 0683 quoting appropriate reference number.

Analyst Programmer

Come and ride the crest of the next North Sea wave

VO Offshore is potentially the most important addition to the John Brown group in years.

VO are specialists in floating platform technology, and one of their greatest strengths is expertise in the use of technically sophisticated design and analysis computer programs. In other words, VO complements and extends John Brown's already broad capability in oil and gas production engineering.

At a time when North Sea operators are showing greater interest than ever in subsea and floating production systems, VO have a special interest in finding a man or woman with the special skills and aptitudes for some highly specialised and challenging software projects.

Although the main qualification is full proficiency in both FORTRAN and BASIC, we're also looking for a totally professional approach to program design and documentation. Experience of computer management and system simulation would be an advantage, and since you'd be working closely with structural and process engineers, you'd obviously need to understand their precise requirements, and provide them with reliable and useable software that really does solve their problems.

The salary should be more than enough to satisfy your short-term ambitions. In the longer term, we're offering you the opportunity to be involved in the next big wave of North Sea activity right from the beginning.

To get your application moving, send a copy of your c.v. to: Stella Littlewood, John Brown Offshore, 20 Eastbourne Terrace, London W2 6LE. Or phone her on 01-262 8080 Ext. 2759.

THE ARTS

THEATRE / A State of Affairs

Adultery makes a comeback

IN THE PUNNING title of "A State of Affairs" at the Lyric Studio Hammersmith, the state is that of marriage. The evening offers virtually a suburban male's guide through the perils of adultery and those sexual urges which threaten home, tranquility and keeping the little woman happy.

As one expects of a television author, Graham Swannell's total gesture is somewhat restricted, lacking in theatricality. But he writes amusingly, and evidently from a wry and sardonic knowledge of the bed as a centre of comic embarrassment as much as of pleasure.

Two of his four playlets, in fact, feature a bed as the chief stage furniture. In the best, "Consequences," Jack and Frances have just spent another of their enjoyable and clandestine hours together, both being married to others.

Gary Bond whose enormous charm and light touch are the show's greatest asset, makes a wonderfully funny fuss when he discovers Frances has broken their arrangement—"we shook hands on it!"—and fallen in love with him. Worse, she wants marriage. Worse still, she has told her husband, who has certainly told Jack's wife, Milly.

Worst of all, Milly now walks in on the guilty pair, and he has to explain to both girls that his marriage means far more to him than this little ding-dong. Julie Legrand, weeping into her shopping bag, suggests all of Frances's heartbroken dignity, while Amanda Redman carries off Milly's chagrin and eventual triumph with the prettiest aplomb.

"The Day of the Dog" is a variant on the same idea. This time Mr Bond's gloomy husband Allen, in a pub with men friends, confesses his beloved wife has discovered an unimportant act of infidelity. Their jocular advice, and retreat with girl pickups, leave him despairing.

"Stuttgart" explains the problem of a tired husband with an oversexed wife. And in "Commitment," a friend's adultery scares a bickering couple into realising how lucky they are, in spite of the restrictions imposed by their first, demanding child.

It is the weaknes of the plays that the rewards of the connubial state are never seriously questioned. A roving eye may be a product not only of lust, but of an unhappy marriage. But, if superficial, they do something to reinstate adultery — once the most overdone subject of drama — as worth something more than a prurient snigger. Mr Swannell should probe further. The director is Peter James.

John Barber

Eccentricities of the lonely drunkard

IT says much about the tone of the evening that Sheila Steafel begins it uncertainly on roller-skates and ends it by tearing up the Yellow Pages.

"Steafel Express," at the Ambassadors Theatre, follows in the line of a distinctly honourable tradition—the quintessentially English type of stage revue where a bright performer expands upon the eccentricities of the lonely, the inebriated and the extrovert.

Her show is modest in scope and form, but during the span of some two, admittedly uneven hours, she demonstrates that she is unquestionably a comedienne of talent.

Miss Steafel is clearly attracted by the Victorian roots of music-hall, with its emphasis on double-meanings and vulgar sentimentality. But for her humour she also draws heavily, and all too predictably, on the mannered and arched social graces of the English middle-class.

These include the cocktail bar habituee who doesn't believe in half-measures and who greets everyone with elongated vowels and "Cheers mah dears."

And it is while on the subject of pained and emphatic enunciation that Miss Steafel produces the gem of her evening: a splendidly irreverent take-off of the Prime Minister who refuses to take any form of opposition for an answer.

Meanwhile, back in the gin-and-tonic belt, she gives us the Madame Chairman who, having had her seed-cake laced with pot, brings the fête to a freak-out close with explicit and free-ranging honesty.

Miss Steafel is really at her best when she pulls away from the well-tramelled targets and brings a critical sense of fun to such public displays as the "Mastermind" arena. She steps forward here into the searching light of instant televised fame as one Avril Hickey from Sdicup (where else) whose chosen subject is "Worrying about life in general." Elsewhere, she gives her own send-up version of Sinatra's "My Way," the reflections of a of a trim white-hatted racialist aunt from South Africa and a reluctant member of the Swan Lake corps de ballet. Nothing especially original in all this, but we are none-the-less in the presence of a performer who seeks to challenge at least some of our basic assumptions.

TELEVISION /

Blott on the Pole

LADY Maud Lynchwood and Kathleen Scott, now clashing rivals for the attention of the Wednesday evening audience, have things in common. Though the former is a mixture of Queen Boadicea and a seaside postcard cartoon, while the latter is played as a cross between Lady Macbeth and Mrs Thatcher, both rule over a male world and both have husbands whose outward dignity conceals a complex of weaknesses.

It is true that Blott On The Landscape (BBC-2), adapted from Tom Sharpe by Malcolm Bradbury, is supposed to be funny and is found so by many, where The Last Place On Earth (ITV) of Trevor Griffiths is a kind of tragedy. But both deal with the huge gap between pious public statements of intent and what happens, mostly out of sight, in practice.

The middle episode of the six-part Blott belonged in large measure to Simon Cadell's very nicely executed Dundridge. He is a civil servant. What he craves is a shining tidy desk over which he can push people's lives with arithmetical precision. His instinct that things become less tidy once you venture beyond Whitehall, especially when threatening motorways, was fully confirmed here.

Farce is funny when people behave as though everything is normal while all around them the world falls apart. Dundridge sees this and acts accordingly. Others, like the senile Lord Leakham, have allowed themselves to become part of the madness. The voraciously over-the-top Lady Maud (Geraldine James) at least has the excuse that she is in large measure the cause of the madness.

Just as Kathleen Scott (Susan Wooldridge), in the six-part Central version of the 1911-12 race to the South Pole, is drawn by Mr Griffiths as the ruler who pushed the unfortunate Capt. Robert Falcon Scott into something beyond his competence, so providing the nation with a legend of heroic failure apparently needed at the time.

Hairlines, make up and closed expression are arranged to make Martin Shaw's Scott look like an uncracked nut. This is seemingly just what is required of him. A tragic hero who stays in his shell may be dramatically negative, but he effectively reflects a man at odds with a hostile world.

After the unwieldy first episode on Monday, the second was comparatively neat in comparing the expedition preparations of Scott and Amundsen, the idealistic amateur against the cunning professional. Director Ferdinand Fairfax made his lavish budget show on the screen, and Trevor Griffiths preserved his much-vaunted political integrity by showing the British as a nation all too easily misled by its own imperialist rhetoric.

All good writers should be persuaded to live to 80 and beyond so that they can enjoy the renewed fame which eventually follows the reaction against early success. The author of "The Echoing Grove" certainly deserves the present swing of the fashion pendulum in her favour, and a lot more time than she was given as one of three items in Jenny Cowan's Bookmark (BBC-2).

BERLIN FILM FESTIVAL / David Hare's first

The Berlin international film festival which opened last Friday night has got off to a speedy start as it must with 32 films to be shown in the festival cinema in 11 days, those competing having two showings in the day.

So on the first full day three competing films were scheduled starting at 9 a.m. with another around that time the next day—lasting five hours. The 9 a.m. start, alas, is much recurring and with it, at least initially, thin houses. It wasn't until the arrival midday Monday of the British entry "Wetherby" that the house was full for the first of any two showings indicating the present status of British cinema.

This to my mind was neither enhanced nor diminished by the new film which is a first feature to be written and directed by David Hare well known for his work in TV and the theatre.

The title refers to a fictional Yorkshire town (not the actual one of that name) where we are quickly introduced to a handful of characters at a small dinner party given at her nice old house by Jean Travers, a sixth form teacher at the local comprehensive.

One of the few is an uninvited guest and goes undetected, which is made more or less believable by his arriving at the door with genuine guests, thought to have brought him along. Thus John Morgan continues to pull off the trick with confidence. But why this intrusion? He is a young man from a southern university said to be here to use the library. We ask the question more urgently the next morning when this perfect stranger turns up again to blow his brains out in front of an appalled Miss Travers.

The rest of the film is taken up often absorbingly in supplying a satisfactory answer. The story being so intricate that it needs flashbacks to a love affair of Miss Travers' 30 years before.

It is only the persistence of a nice detective helped by the arrival of a girlfriend of Morgan's that leaves things clear though not entirely convincing in the end.

Especially questionable to me was the curious leak of water onto the table at the dinner party due to a loose tile in the roof which Morgan goes into the attic to repair guided by his hostess.

Explanation finally depends on this incident, though it is not inquired into until the very end which seemed to me something of a sell, as they say, so did the conclusion that Morgan's and Miss Travers' troubles were due merely to that fashionable malaise, lack of communication, though it's not put quite so plainly.

ART / In the steps of Piranesi

DAVID HEPHER is an artist who has understood the fascination of architecture. To an extraordinary extent he conveys both its realities and the way it stirs the imagination.

At the heart of what he is doing in the seven big paintings, and in the prints, in his latest exhibition at the Angela Flowers Gallery, 11 Tottenham Mews, is a sense of the relationship between men and their architecture. It is something which makes the works in this one-man show, which continues until March 16, persuasive.

Hepher's paintings of flats in Camberwell are familiar from his previous exhibitions. His latest studies, if one may describe paintings measuring 244 x 213·5 cm as studies, do, however, manifest a departure from his earlier work, for the brushwork is freer and bolder.

Entirely new are his big paintings after Piranesi and the prints on the same theme. Here the fantasy — and a brooding awareness of how architecture can dwarf man, indeed impose upon him a subservient role, so brilliantly conveyed by Piranesi—has been echoed by a 20th-century artist.

This understanding of Piranesi is relevant to the new paintings of the flats in Camberwell. In the daylight scene the inhumanity of these dwellings is tempered by a few figures but in the two night-time views they have almost all withdrawn indoors. Yet from the glow in the windows we know these horrid, dehumanising buildings are occupied.

They are painted with impressive skill: every detail has been observed, yet it is not the parts, nor their sum total, that create a near-hypnotic effect.

MUSIC / Maxwell Davies's No. 3

THE TERMS of reference in Peter Maxwell Davies's Third Symphony, which had its first performance in the Free Trade Hall, Manchester, on Tuesday night, are wide and far-reaching—medieval plainchant, theories of Renaissance church-building and Mahler's Ninth Symphony. And somewhere dancing away in it, as the composer said in a talk on Sunday, is the influence of Tippett. Specifically, I would say, in the lithe and richly ornamented writing for strings in the first movement.

Whatever the factors which spurred on the composer, the result is a deeply impressive symphony easily related to the classical tradition both in its basis in tonality and in the severe logicality of its main argument from opening passacaglia to final adagio, all the material related either thematically or harmonically. Between these massive movements come two short scherzos, the second a distorted mirror-image of the first and pointing towards the finale.

The beauty of the scoring here, with its passages for solo strings and the gull-like cries of woodwind, haunts the memory.

Maxwell Davies may not be as violent a composer as he was but his uncompromising idiom assumes a willingness on the part of his audience to meet him more than half way. One longs to come soon to closer grips with the first movement and its barrage of virtuoso decoration from the trumpets (superbly played).

As the work proceeds and its power envolops the listener, it becomes clear that the emotional groundplan is of stark and intensifying tragedy, reaching its catharsis in the slow and luminously scored finale, which brings together all that has preceded it in music that will surely come to be heard as one of the profound artistic utterances of our time.

The performance by the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, which like the composer has just notched up its half century, was magnificent and, as those who attended weekend rehearsals know, diligently prepared by the conductor, Edward Downes.

There was a stirring ovation from the large audience for the symphony and its creator who, clutching a bouquet, must have relished this homage in the city where he was once told he would never make a composer.

Poor singing in Handel's 'Rinaldo'

WHEN about a year ago the students of the Opera School of the Royal College of Music revived Respighi's magical little opera "The Sleeping Beauty," the freshness and delight in discovering an enchanting and neglected piece soon absorbed any vocal weaknesses or lack of experience in the individual performances.

With a work now as familiar as Handel's "Rinaldo," which they are staging at the College this week in honour of the composer's tercentenary, there are no similarly compensating factors to deflect attention from what was, in Tuesday's performance, the generally poor, and quite worrying, quality of the singing.

Nor was a cast of young singers, who are presumably looking forward to a future in opera, given much assistance by Basil Coleman's direction, its staid and stylised conventionality demanding a discipline of body and elegance of movement that few could manage.

The title role was bravely attempted by Shelagh Stuchbery. It had clearly been well prepared, but her voice has yet to develop any really promising substance, any resiliently distinctive edge. Little more could be anticipated at this stage of the modest, sweetly toned Almirena of Fiona Rose. A much firmer grasp of the opportunities offered by the music of the sorceress Armida was taken by Helen Edwards, with singing which, though still raw and unpolished, provided the one performance of real vocal presence and theatrical potential.

As for the men, in this first of two alternating casts, they were mostly so inadequate that one began to wonder how they had ever been accepted into so distinguished an institution in the first place, only Michael Law, in his few brief sentences as the Herald, suggesting a strong, true voice in the making.

Rather more pleasure was to be derived from the instrumental playing, but the numerous passages of questionable liaison between the stage and the conductor, Christopher Adey, easily forgivable in other circumstances, here simply underlined the disturbing gulf between intention and achievement.

The Touchstone—young Rossini

1812 MAY have had its ups and downs on the European military front, but for the young Rossini, launching his campaign to conquer that notoriously hazardous territory of the Italian opera theatre, the year could scarcely have been more auspicious.

Five of his operas had their premieres in the space of eleven months or so, and among them he scored at least one resounding victory with "La Pietra del Paragone," a light-hearted but sharply pointed comment on the dilemmas of love and the fickleness of fair-weather friends.

This lively two-acter, rendered as "The Touchstone" in Arthur Jacob's spirited English version, is this year's production by the Oxford University Opera Club; it opened at the Playhouse, Oxford, on Tuesday night, and there are further performances tomorrow and Saturday. Since the production has gone for completeness, the evening is a long one, but it is also one in which Mark Stobb's direction and Stephen Clarke's conducting keep the score alertly on its toes.

The touchstone of the title is the state of financial ruin which the wealthy Count Asdrubale invents for himself in order to test the loyalty of the assorted guests gathered for the weekend at his country estate.

As Asdrubale himself Clive Burch sings strongly, and Jenny Miller as the stalwart Clarice (herself amorously torn between the Count and the Giocondo of David Aldred) finds a nobility of voice and gesture and also some comic characterisation in the further convolutions of plot near the end. The orchestra has yet to settle down fully, but on the whole this production tackles the musical and dramatic complexities with wit and vigour.

Prentice Puccini

BURDENED with awkward and ill-timed librettos, the two operas of Puccini's prentice years have never achieved much success though they were well received by contemporary audiences. Their revival this week by University College Opera at the Bloomsbury Theatre, gives us a chance to judge for ourselves

"Le Villi," based on the old German legend of the Wilis ruthlessly destroying an unfaithful lover as in "Giselle," has little music to prophesy the great composer to come, apart from a couple of solos which have melodies of an unmistakeably Pucinian art, though they tend to go on too long. Much of the score is anonymous, even tedious.

That cannot be said of "Edgar" dating from five years later—(1889). By now Puccini had learned a shade more about pacing his music to the story in hand.

Neither work cast with youngish professionals was very convincingly sung. Both tenors failed to encompass the composer's already appreciable demands on his leading men. However, Elizabeth Byrne sang appealingly as Anna in "Le Villi", Carol Rowlands sensually as Tigrana and Jennifer Rhys-Davies affectingly as Fidelia. Stefan Janski's stagings in David Blight's unit set had more vigour than subtlety. Christopher Fifield did well with a valiant orchestra to revive these fitfully interesting but too prolonged pieces.

Teddy bear's sale record of £1,100

By ALISON BECKETT
Art Sales Correspondent

A RECORD price for a teddy bear was made at Phillips in London yesterday when a hump-backed beast 18ins tall was bought by an American dealer for £1,100.

The bear, which was still furry but had lost some straw, was made about 1909 by Steiff, the German firm which introduced them to Europe a few years earlier. It was estimated at £100-£150.

An 1885 picnic set and a silver travelling bidet were among the highlights of Sotheby's Russian auction in London, in which they were consigned as the property of a member of the Russian Imperial Royal Family, and sold for £14,000 and £11,000 respectively.

The top price of the auction, which totalled £802,900, was for a Faberge hardstone figure of a carpenter, 5in high, at £75,000; while 12 soup plates from the vast Kremlin Service, commissioned by Emperor Nicholas I in 1837, fetched £11,000.

BRASS MEASURES

£3,000 tops sale

The best lot among a collection of weights and measures included in Sotheby's scientific instrument sale was a set of 11 English brass measures, 1854, which made £3,000. They were all used by the old Cheshire borough councils, this set by Warrington.

Old hearing aids were also popular in the same auction which totalled £187,898, one of the most curious being a mid-19th century English brass "Banjo" ear trumpet with a telescopic tube made by Arnold and Son which realised £220.

Prices do not include buyer's premium which is 10 per cent.

NORTH WEST HOPES FOR U.S. TOURISM BOOM

Obituary

BETTY RADICE

By DAVID HOLLOWAY

BETTY RADICE, the editor for 20 years of the Penguin Classics series which did much to introduce many of the lesser known Latin and Greek authors in translation to a wider audience, has died at the age of 73.

In 1962 she went to Penguin to join E. V. Rieu, whose own translations of Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey" had sold over a million copies during the 1939-45 war and helped him to build a collection of English texts culled from more than 40 classical writers.

From 1964 until her retirement a short time ago, she had sole charge of the series, coaxing translations into readable English out of scholars and working herself to produce over the years her own versions of Livy, Terence and Pliny. She also translated Erasmus's "In Praise of Folly."

Yorkshire born

She worked for a number of years producing a large-scale reference work of equal value to academics and the general reader, "Who's Who in the Ancient World."

Mrs Radice was born in Yorkshire and went from Hull Grammar School to read Greats at Oxford, obtaining a first in Part One.

Soon after coming down she married Italo de Lisle Radice and between having four children, taught at a London crammers.

Rev. Bernard Peter Murtough. At Weybirdge aged 71. Headmaster, St George's College, Weybridge 1949-76, and Superior of Josephite Congregation School chaplain since 1980.

EX-MINISTER'S JOB

Mr Roland Moyle, 56, the former Labour Health Minister of State, has been appointed a deputy chairman of the new Police Complaints Authority, which with supervise investigations of complaints against officers. Mr Brittan, Home Secretary announced in a Commons written reply yesterday. The other deputy chairman is to be Rear Admiral John Bell.

THROWER IMPROVES

Percy Thrower, 72, the gardening expert, who had a heart attack last week, is up and about again at the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital. Mr Thrower, of Bomere Heath, near Shrewsbury, was said last night to be "comfortable and stable."

WAY OF THE WORLD

Environmental Days

MR Cyril Smith, the Liberal MP for Rochdale, has proposed creating a "Ministry for Young People" and a "National Environmental Corps" which every young person in the country could join. It would, Mr Smith thinks, "prepare them for life" in the way National Service used to do.

But wouldn't the National Environmental Corps have to be compulsory, like National Service? Wouldn't there have to be allowance for conscientious objectors? Sensible young people might well object on conscientious grounds, such as the protection of the English language, to belonging to a corps with such an absurd name. It might as well be called the "Environmental Army," reinforcing the slight military flavour of "corps."

Mr Smith's choice of name is a wonderful example of the fungoid growth of the word "environmental." Since the "Environment" was invented about 25 years ago (it originally meant, I suppose, what used to be called the Creation) it has come to mean whatever anybody wants it to mean.

It has reached the point where proposed new motorways, airports and oil or natural gas installations are sometimes described as having "full environmental safeguards," or even just being plain "environmental" by those who are anxious to justify them against objectors.

There is even a huge Department of State, the "Ministry of the Environment," which would have been regarded not so long ago as obviously absurd and incredible. If Orwell had thought of such a thing he would have put it into "1984." It would have had much the same obfuscatory and upside-down functions as his Ministries of Love and Plenty.

Revenge

STILL fuming over Oxford's refusal to confer an honorary degree on Mrs Thatcher, a Conservative MP, Mr Roy Galley, who sits for Halifax, asks why, in view of the university's "declining reputation," its resources should not be shifted to northern universities.

It would be better to shift its buildings to northern universities or even to northern towns without universities. Magdalen tower, for instance, would look well in Halifax, its beauty enhanced by contrasting surroundings.

Move Christ Church to Bradford; the Bodleian to Salford or Barnsley; All Souls to Toxteth, the renowned jewel of "inner city" Liverpool. The remaining colleges and other buildings could be moved to various other northern sites as required.

The scheme would have two advantages. It would express the nation's anger at Oxford in an emphatic way, without actually destroying the university buildings altogether, as some have suggested.

And it would enormously increase the "tourist potential" and "heritage value" of these northern towns, at present unfairly deficient in these vital assets.

The gaps left in Oxford itself could either be used for office buildings or small aircraft landing-strips, or sown with salt and dedicated to the infernal deities.

A Cunning Plan

AN American tobacco firm has produced a smokeless cigarette which is not lit but still gives users the "lift" they get from nicotine. In place of tobacco it has nicotine-soaked filters.

Anti-smoking activists in England will be watching this development. A spokesman for the Anti-Smoking Liberation Front (ASLF) said yesterday that if smokeless cigarettes are introduced into this country they will still carry on the campaign against all forms of smoking, including smokeless smoking.

"These cigarettes should carry a small explosive charge so that if anyone tries to light one he will get a shock which will hopefully put him off smoking for life."

If cigarettes were introduced in the form of small paper tubes entirely free of nicotine, would ASLF and the Anti-Smoking Liberation Army (ASLA), its militant wing, still carry on the struggle against them?

The ASLF spokesman seemed doubtful. But an ASLA spokesman had no doubts. "We shall not cease operations until the very last memory of this deadliest scourge of humanity has been extirpated. A luta continua!" he suddenly shouted, giving the complicated two-fisted salute which signifies death to all its enemies.

Risky

LORD MELCHETT, vice-president of the Ramblers' Association, has accused the Ministry of the Environment of failing to keep a four-year-old promise to advise walkers who use rights of way in fields where bulls are kept.

It is not clear what advice can be given. Lord Melchett himself is, of course, in a privileged position. It is well known that bulls never attack peers of the realm (and think twice about attacking baronets). He can go into any field in perfect safety, and, if he wishes, address the most ferocious bull on the importance of the environment and the rights of ramblers of free access to it.

Or can he? Authorities differ. Some maintain that bulls do not regard peers of comparatively recent creation (the Barony of Melchett dates from 1928) as inviolable. Others maintain that bulls regard only pre-Reformation peerages as inviolable—and not all of those.

High Art

"COME and be a moving sculpture! Duncan Whiteman, who recently appeared on Blue Peter, is a man who puts children into big blue bags; if you'd like to explore your own potential as a sculpture and turn your friends into sculpture come along to this all day workshop" (from a list of events at Southampton Art Gallery).

Why everything's so lovely for Christina

BY AVRIL GROOM

THOSE who know Covent Garden well —and the developments which have taken place in the 10 years since the market closed —will also know the name Christina Smith.

The casual shopper or tourist, though, will have had no idea of her influence on the area until she started putting her name to some of her most recent enterprises, like Smith's Restaurant and The Flowersmith florist, which opened at the end of last year.

But Christina has been there a great deal longer than the trendsetters first person and was, in the early Sixties, the without market or historic connections in the area to buy property there, when she started wholesaling decorative items for the home with her subsequently successful business, Goods and Chattels.

In the following 20 or so years, while building up her various enterprises, she acquired something of a reputation for toughness and a dislike of publicity: she particularly did not want to get involved, she said, in the public controversy over the Covent Garden redevelopment plans.

Having now, at the age of 50, entered a period of what she calls "consolidation rather than expansion," she is happier about exposure.

She admits that, throughout her career, she has, by a mixture of astute judgment and good luck, been in the right place at the right time. "I don't think I ever thought ahead very much, though. If I had, I think, I would have expanded faster and probably made a financial mess of things.

"When buying Covent Garden property I thought of it more as potential shops or as preserving what I felt to be a fine building, rather than as a long-term investment. Most of my buying was done before the area developed its present character."

After several jobs "of the type well-brought-up girls do," including working for a City broker, Christina joined Sir Terence Conran as personal assistant in the late Fifties, when he had a small exhibition fittings business in Fulham.

She left Conran in 1962 for a spell of work in the United States and, with the money she saved, bought a round-the-world ticket to adventurous places like Mexico, Japan, Nepal and India. "I already had the idea of selling ethnic merchandise," she said.

When she returned she found she had been beaten to the retail post by Conran's infant Habitat and so, with an ex-Conran partner, she set up her Goods and Chattels wholesaling business. The paper flowers, brightly-coloured bags, enamelware and so on that she imported were an instant Sixties success though, she said, "we ran on a shoestring for the whole Sixties period and it made me very suspicious of people. I had rather few friends then."

She started the business from her flat, but soon took a lease on her first Neal Street building and was later able to secure the freehold for her partner's backer. When they separated, she persuaded her bank to give her a mortgage on the building: no mean feat in the early Sixties for a single woman investing in an undesirable area.

By 1972 she owned another Neal Street property and came to a watershed. An unexpected windfall enabled her to make her first trip to China in search of merchandise — in those days very much breaking new ground — and the Covent Garden development plan, with the proposed closure of the market, was published.

"China had an amazing impact on me," she said. "I found the people, the business methods and the commodities fascinating and I have been back twice a year ever since, with major trips into remote areas about every 18 months."

The immediate result was her first Neal Street shop, which led eventually to a more upmarket version and, in 1981, the mini-department store of Neal Street East, with its various projects including her favourite, the Oriental bookshop and, the following year, the equally Eastern-inspired Tea House.

At the same time, she became involved in the preservation of Covent Garden.

"I wanted to preserve the buildings and protect the residents," she said. "When I objected at the public inquiry I found that there were very few other business people who knew the right methods needed to exert some influence." In the end, of course, she and the others mobilised major support: she is still on the 30-strong elected forum which controls the area's development.

Another lucky hunch was taking a short lease from the G L C on a huge, 60,000sq ft warehouse which was scheduled for demolition and which she let to the many small business people who had asked her about space in the area. Eventually it was reprieved and its conversion has been a major project. She is now in the process of buying the freehold.

The warehouse houses 55 commercial tenants, a community and youth centre, plus her own gallery and restaurant. The latter might seem an indulgence in an area overburdened with eating places but, she said, "I'd always wanted one and I've done it in my own way.

"I think huge expense-account meals are passé and people want light, interesting food at good prices." Smith's has, for instance, a very interesting three-course lunch menu at £6·95 and serves light meals all afternoon.

Despite her "consolidation" claims, Christina does have expansion plans, in true tycoon style.

An "informal eating place" with vegetarian and exotic food, named The Casbah from her initials C.A.S., is already projected for the art gallery, plus perhaps another bookshop and a shop connected with Oriental cookery.

Relaxing is something she does little of. As she travels so much, trips abroad have become routine, though she loves Paris for weekends. Otherwise, she likes reading at home in her Covent Garden flat and prefers her beloved chosen area of London to just about anywhere, except China.

EATING IN WITH BON VIVEUR

GIVING PLAICE A PLACE ON THE MENU

THE MENU

Stuffed fried whole baby plaice
or

Pigs' kidneys in puff pastry
or

Kiwi fruit vacherin

FISH features strongly in this menu. The milder weather is coming, which is good for our fishermen, though the dwindling number of fish shops more than depresses us.

In our campaign for more fish, plaice, fried and stuffed, stands very high. The fish are only little plaice — the inexpensive ones — bought, cleaned and very neatly beheaded, with tails removed by you for minimum wastage. Allow one per head, plus a few spoonfuls of left-overs from a dish of spinach purée and send them to table fried and stuffed with the purée, a few shrimps and a tiny tin of asparagus tips.

When we were in Portugal we discovered a wonderful dish called rissois, comprising paper-thin puff pastry, a handful of shrimps and a spoonful or two of creamy white sauce. These, being well-mixed together, are sealed up in little crescents, deep-fried and served with a Winter Herb Sauce.

Moving on to main-course alternatives, we have chosen Pigs' Kidneys in Puff Pastry or Pigs' Kidneys with Mustard Sauce, using rice to stretch this one a little. Be firm about using only pigs' kidneys and always buy the short-grained rather fat risotto rice to team with them.

If you want to be bold give a semolina pudding. Provided no one is daft enough to tell any children it is semolina, they will never know and will polish it off with pleasure. Add a little cream and even the adults will not be backward in their praise, despite semolina's dreadful English reputation.

But to conclude we serve a delicate, sweet, fruit-filled vacherin.

As usual, either cook the whole menu or pick out the dishes you want and by-pass the rest.

THE RECIPES

STUFFED FRIED WHOLE BABY PLAICE

INGREDIENTS: allow 1 baby plaice, topped and tailed, for each of 4 persons; 1 tiny tin of asparagus tips; 1 teacup of cooked spinach; 1 tablespoon cream or top-of-the-milk; fat pinch of nutmeg; 2oz shrimps; 2 small eggs, beaten; 8 thick raw potato chips; 1 small dish of flour and another of fine breadcrumbs; 4 lemon wedges.

METHOD: With a small sharp knife make an incision down the spine of each fish, leaving 1in uncut at each end. Pare back the flesh very carefully on each side to form a gaping mouth. Roll sides back and hold them in position by wedging in 2 raw potato chips. Having done so, pass each fish through flour, then beaten egg and finally bury in soft crumbs and pat in, shaking off any surplus. Fry to a good golden brown in a deep fryer. Drain on absorbent paper and lay flat on a working surface. Mix nutmeg and cream or top-of-the-milk together and beat well into puréed spinach. Ease out and discard the chips. Replace with a line of spinach purée inside the lips. Lay asparagus tips inside on one side and overlap shrimps on the other. Serve with lemon wedges.

SHRIMP-STUFFED PUFF PASTRY CRESCENTS

INGREDIENTS: 2 dozen 3in-diameter circles of bought or home-made puff pastry, rolled very thinly; 1 teacup of thick white sauce; 2½fl oz thick cream; 1 scant teaspoon anchovy purée; 4oz shelled shrimps; 1 small egg, beaten.

METHOD: Mix shelled shrimps into sauce, add cream and anchovy purée and beat well. Drop a fat teaspoon of shrimp filling on to the centre of each pastry circle. Wet all round with raw beaten egg, fold over and pinch together firmly. Slide into a deep fryer of hot oil and when well puffed up and richly golden brown, drain, pile on to a shallow, heated dish and serve Winter Herb Sauce separately.

WINTER HERB SAUCE

INGREDIENTS: 4oz melted butter; 1 rounded tablespoon finely-scissored parsley heads, and also of finely scissored chives; 2 fat pinches of powdered ginger; 1 rounded teaspoon finely-crumbled dried chervil and also of crumbled dried tarragon.

METHOD: Mix all together in a small pan. Heat through over a very low heat until butter is melted.

PIGS' KIDNEYS IN PUFF PASTRY

INGREDIENTS: 1 pig's kidney per person; Dijon mustard; English mustard; puff pastry; salt and pepper.

METHOD: Skin the kidneys and almost slit through completely. Rub in a little Dijon mustard, close up and score over the skinned outsides. Rub in a little made English mustard. Roll out bought or home-made puff pastry thinly. Cut into 10in squares. Season lightly with salt and pepper. Lay a prepared pig's kidney on each pastry square. Wet edges with cold water then roll up and fold in the ends. Set on a lightly-floured baking sheet in a pre-heated oven at 400F (Gas 6), one shelf above centre. Bake until pastry is risen and darkened to a rich golden brown.

PIGS' KIDNEYS WITH PIEDMONT-STYLE RICE

INGREDIENTS: 5 skinned and sliced pigs' kidneys for 6 persons; 4 shallots, peeled and sliced; 2oz vegetable oil; 1 dessertspoon concentrated tomato purée; 8oz risotto rice; ½ pint dry white wine; 1½ to 2 pints strong pork bone stock; 1 dessertspoon soy sauce, six 3in sq croûtes of butter-fried crustless bread; 1 flat tablespoon milled, fresh parsley; salt; black pepper; 2oz butter.

METHOD: Melt butter in a roomy frying pan and fry chopped shallots for 2min, then turn and repeat. Draw in the rice and keep turning until this is yellowed. Add given wine and ½ pint stock. Stir well and allow to bubble and become absorbed in rice grains. Repeat with a further ¼ pint stock then repeat once more, simmering on until liquor is again absorbed and so continue, adding the stock until the rice is cooked. Draw in the tomato purée, correct seasoning with salt and pepper and shape into a border on a heated, shallow, round dish. Place the croûtes side by side in the empty central space. Fry the prepared kidney pieces in the oil, just to stiffen them. Swill with the wine, add the soy sauce and work up to make a very thick mixture. Heap equally on to the croûtes. Scatter on the parsley and Mustard Sauce.

MUSTARD SAUCE

INGREDIENTS: 1 flat dessertspoon made English mustard and 1 of Dijon mustard; 2 chopped hard-boiled eggs for every 5 pigs' kidneys; 1 pint very strongly reduced pork bone stock; 2fl oz strong red wine; salt and black pepper; Brussels sprouts.

METHOD: Mix wine and stock, boil up in a small pan with the two mustards. Add chopped hard-boiled eggs, season with salt and black pepper and work in sufficient sieved, cooked Brussels sprouts to thicken adequately. Scatter over the cooked kidneys and rice.

KIWI FRUIT VACHERIN

INGREDIENTS: 3 ripe kiwi fruit, peeled and sliced; 2 Jaffa oranges, slice-peeled with a very sharp knife and then cut into thin rondels; soft brown sugar; powdered cinnamon; mint heads; 1 tablespoon orange curaçao.

INGREDIENTS for meringue: 5 No. 3 egg whites, separated; 2oz and 6oz castor sugar (vanilla flavoured).

METHOD: Place the orange rings and kiwi fruit on a smallish sheet of foil, sprinkling each layer liberally with the sugar and lightly with the powdered cinnamon. Fold up the foil, leaving a gap of about 1½in above the orange slices before folding edges securely. Bake at 325F (Gas 3), mid-shelf, for 16min. Unwrap and allow to become perfectly chilled. For the meringue: whip egg whites until just stiff. Keep whipping while drawing in the 2oz sugar. Continue for 4min at full speed, in an electric mixer. Stop whipping altogether. Fold in remaining sugar gradually and without beating. Through a No. 7 metal or plastic pipe and nylon icing bag, pipe out the meringue case, first drawing a pencilled 7in-diameter circle on waxed paper. Cut round, reverse and lay on a very lightly oiled baking sheet. Pipe out a 1in wall of merigue. Pipe some of remaining meringue mixture into centre to make a base, then spread out smoothly. If liked a further round of rosettes may be piped on the top edge all round once the initial piping is firm. Bake at 275F (Gas 1) until the waxed paper peels easily from the base. Set on a flat decorative plate. Encircle the top with peeled kiwi slices. Pile the orange slices into the centre. Moisten with accumulated juices, stirred with the curacao and garnish with very small tufts of baby mint heads.

A thank you to the readers of Daily Telegraph who responded to the tragic plight of the elderly in Ethiopia and Sudan

With your help over the past six months Help The Aged has been engaged in the relief of elderly victims of drought in Ethiopia and other parts of Africa, especially Sudan.

To date £340,000 has been allocated to projects in the drought affected areas of Africa. These are just a few ways in which Help The Aged has assisted:

£60,000 has been provided to the relief operations of the Christian Relief and Development Association in Ethiopia. Through the Sudan we are reaching elderly victims of the drought in areas not controlled by the Ethiopian Government. Within Sudan £5,000 has been donated to Sudan Aid for relief of refugees from Eritrea and Tigre.

£10,000 has provided famine relief supplies through Help Age Kenya in Northern Kenya. A further £15,000 through Help Age Kenya has been allocated to ongoing development projects related to the drought programme.

Through Caritas in Tanzania £15,000 has provided help for the transportation of urgently needed grain supplies. £5,000 has enabled a local group to obtain a harrow and planter so that crop growing can begin again.

£29,000 is being given to the Relief Society of Tigray in Ethiopia for the purchase of oxen, farming implements and seeds. £26,000 has been provided to the Zimbabwe Drought Operation Committee for the relief of displaced rural elderly from Mozambique.

All this relief work has been made possible with the help of generous readers of this newspaper. But as generous and caring as the response has been, the plight of the elderly in Ethiopia, Sudan and other stricken areas is still critical. They have to cope with the drought, famine, disease — and their age.

They still desperately need your support to provide clean water, food, medical supplies and other essentials.

If you can help, please do so today. Tomorrow may be too late for some.

SIR KEITH'S LITTLE BOMB

IT IS WELL KNOWN that Sir KEITH JOSEPH does not number an acute sense of political timing and an ability to break bad news gently among his many virtues. His almost offhand reference in the House on Tuesday to the fact that he cannot produce the £400 million it would cost to fund the restructuring package the local authorities have been dangling in front of the teachers amply, and at first sight catastrophically, demonstrates that.

His desire to dispatch unrealistic expectations on the part of the teachers and their local authority employers—who, after all, were never going to have to find that seven per cent. addition to the salary bill themselves—may be praiseworthy. But was it really necessary for him to announce now, on the eve of what looked like being an unpopular and less than wholehearted demonstration of the teachers' industrial muscle, the result of a battle with the Treasury that he must have fought and lost well before Christmas? The teachers and the local authorities knew perfectly well that their package deal was not on for this year anyway, but only the National Union of Teachers was prepared to pull out of the talks altogether. Until now the NUT has been cast as the villain of the piece, and a significant number of teachers around the country saw them in that light: certainly the teaching profession was not the angry monolith we saw last year, and the unions knew that this time it would be hard to drum up public support for their hard-luck story.

Now Sir KEITH has removed a crucial card from the management's hand and united the teachers. He has not settled the question of how much the country really can afford for the revamping of the teaching profession—he has exposed himself to spurious but nevertheless plausible accusations of misleading both teachers and local authorities, and he has made it harder for both parties to find a quick route out of the present impasse. He has some explaining to do.

A COMMON CAUSE

MRS THATCHER is not the first British statesman to appeal to the American people to stop sending money to the IRA; but no one has made that plea with so much eloquence and vigour as she did when addressing Congress yesterday. More important still her speech followed hot in the wake of one of the boldest moves the Irish Republic has ever made against the IRA's campaign of murder and treason—the passing of an emergency Bill which gives the Government power to sequestrate promptly and efficiently funds of criminal organisations lodged under camouflage in Irish banks. Already more than I£1,750,000 have been seized under the provisions of the Act. Add to this the fact that some American bankers are now under suspicion of lending their services to the laundering of the funds of criminal organisations, and there must surely be some hope that Mrs THATCHER's words will not go unheeded.

Perhaps the greatest benefit of Dr FITZGERALD's drastic law (passed with the full support of Mr HAUGHEY and the Opposition) is that it exposes more vividly than ever before the sustained attack which the Republic itself has for years suffered from Republican terrorists. Casualties in the South have, of course, been vastly less numerous than in the North, but bank raids, kidnapping, kidnap threats and the like have become almost commonplace events. In the North also such events occur regularly; many of them (on both sides of the Border) get relatively little publicity and British as well as Irish politicians have too often succumbed to the temptation to underrate the IRA's threat to public order. The facts will now have to be faced.

As Mrs THATCHER emphasised, the IRA is the common enemy of the United Kingdom and the Republic. Cross-Border co-operation between the two States is still inhibited for purely historic reasons. Mrs Thatcher's warm words about Dr FITZGERALD yesterday should help to remove these impediments; but he must also make his contribution by accepting in practice and unequivocally what he already accepted in principle, Ulster's right to self-determination.

FOOD FOR THOUGHT

ANYTHING SAID BY SPOKESMEN for Poland's military regime must be taken at face value but it does now appear it is having second thoughts about locking up Mr LECH WALESA, the president of the banned trade union Solidarity. Mr WALESA, who for much of last year eschewed confrontation with the authorities, called for a token 15-minute general strike next week as a protest against impending sharp increases in food prices. Resorting to the now familiar cat-and-mouse routine, the Gdansk prosecutor called him in and told him he would be back in prison if he didn't shut up. Now the authorities have changed their tone.

To be fair to Gen JARUZELSKI the food prices have been officially signalled (sudden increases gave birth to Solidarity in 1980) and Poles have been invited to say what they think of them. And it has to be faced that the Polish economy is such a shambles that higher prices might just help, and may even be demanded by the International Monetary Fund as the price of membership. But by arresting three prominent Solidarity activists and threatening Mr WALESA the authorities are neither generating goodwill nor managing to intimidate the union's overt and covert leadership and supporters.

There are other, wider, reasons for the looming confrontation. It is reasonable to think that the Polish Security forces are still smarting over the outcome of the trial of Father POPIELUSZKO's murderers—who were after all some of its own kind—and the Government itself is probably anxious to show the Soviet Union and other Warsaw Pact allies that it can still crack the whip. The Catholic Church has also been told to discipline some of its priests, and sermons are now being scrutinised for "anti-state" bias. Cardinal GLEMP, now embarking on his first pastoral visit to Britain, is no STEFAN WYSZYNSKI but he has lost some of his caution since the Popieluszko affair and has told the Government that it should not try to rule by fear. The General desperately needs to secure a good church-state dialogue, and persists in going the wrong way about it.

Termites boring into the West's woodwork

ALUN CHALFONT on a new guide to the infiltrators

IF the free world is ever enslaved, it will be to a great extent the work of those people to whom Lenin referred contemptuously as useful idiots. They are those men and women who, for a variety of reasons, are prepared to take advantage of their freedom in order to advance the policies of those who are committed to destroying it. Sometimes such people are sincere but misguided; sometimes treacherous and devious.

They have one thing in common — an inability, or refusal, to comprehend the nature of the gulf which separates the two great power groupings whose confrontation dominates contemporary international relations. This failure of understanding often leads to the perception of some kind of symmetry between the superpowers. One of the leading intellectual gurus of the Left has described the East-West conflict as "a degenerative state" driven by an "interoperative and reciprocal logic which threatens all impartially."

AS is often the case, the truth is much simpler; and it can be stated without recourse to the turgid jargon of the political scientist. The East — that is to say, the Soviet Union, its clients and allies — is governed by a political system in which individual liberty is accorded lower priority than the interests of the State. Furthermore, the nations which comprise the Soviet Empire live in that condition of cultural barbarism which has been vividly described as "historical amnesia" At the ideological centre of Soviet imperialism lies a belief that Communism will inevitably prevail; and that anything which accelerates its victory is by definition morally defensible.

The West, a much looser grouping of nations comprising the United States and its clients and allies, bases its political arrangements on the primacy of individual liberty and the belief that the State exists to serve the citizen, not the citizen to serve the State. These two systems are, and always will be, irreconcilable.

This is not to say that in certain circumstances they might not exist side by side; we might one day, as Winston Churchill said 35 years ago, "bridge the gulf between the two worlds so that each can live their life, if not in friendship, at least without the hatreds of war." For the present, however, the circumstances do not exist. The Soviet Union has maintained massive military forces continuously since the end of the 1939-45 war.

More recently it has added to these to create the most powerful aggregation of military power in history; and it has demonstrated repeatedly, from the events in East Germany in 1953 to those in Afghanistan in 1980, that it is prepared to use that military power not only to preserve the integrity of its empire, but to extend its borders and its political influence wherever it is permitted to do so. In fact, the free world is under threat from a powerful State which combines a commitment to the principles of Marx and Lenin with a determination to see those principles put into universal practice.

The resistance of the West to this danger has been mobilised very largely around Nato, a defensive alliance of North America and Western Europe. Sir Clive Rose, now chairman of the council of the Royal United Services Institute for Defence Studies, has been uniquely placed to observe over the years the strengths and weaknesses of this alliance. He served in the diplomatic service in Washington, Bonn and Paris; as head of the United Kingdom Delegation to the talks on Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions in Vienna and, in his last appointment, as British Ambassador to Nato.

He has now distilled his experience into a penetrating analysis* of how the western alliance is threatened not only by an external adversary, but by an internal erosion of public support encouraged by the Soviet Union's exploitation of its useful idiots in the West.

He divides these diligent termites into two categories — "adversaries" and "critics." Under the first heading he examines the activities of the Soviet front organisations, concentrating on the largest and most effective of these, the World Peace Council. As Sir Clive explains, the WPC directs and co-ordinates the pro-Soviet components of the international "peace" movement — "peace," in the Marxist-Leninist sense, standing for permanent conflict with the democracies. For example, its principal objectives include the strengthening of national "peace" movements into a world-wide network, the prevention of new U.S. missile deployment in western Europe and a "campaign against the conspiracies of the Washington-Peking-Tokyo axis."

The WPC, by securing key appointments in other bodies which are not themselves front organisations, is able to influence opinion in a way which is not immediately obvious to those of a trusting nature. Sir Clive cites, as a classic example of this, the Generals for Peace and Disarmament. This organisation includes in its membership retired officers who previously held high rank in Nato (11 of them, according to a list published in 1983); at least four other members are also officials of the WPC.

Sir Clive devotes a substantial section of his book to a survey of the "peace" movement in the United Kingdom. The early history is studded with names which evoke a strong, not to say suffocating, sense of nostalgia—Canon John Collins, Peggy Duff, Philip Noel Baker, and, of course, Bertrand Russell. As the story comes up to date in the chapter dealing with the years 1963-1983, the modern CND begins to take shape, with Monsignor Bruce Kent telling the Communist Party Congress of 1983 "I do not believe we are so very far apart on the major issues"; E. P. Thompson declaring fearlessly that of the two superpowers the United States seemed "to be the more dangerous and provocative in its general military and diplomatic strategies, which press around the Soviet Union with menacing bases"; and supporters of CND engaging in some hilarious nonsense, such as the claim that "in February 1982, Wales had become the first nuclear-free country in Europe, if not in the world."

SIR CLIVE'S account of the campaigns against western defence, which includes a valuable annex setting out details of the principal international front organisations, is a factual, well researched and disenchanted view of the international "peace" movement, and specifically of the British CND of which he writes: They have not succeeded in counteracting the impression, strongly reinforced by the predominant emphasis at demonstrations and meetings around the country and in much of their writing, that CND's criticisms are directed almost exclusively at the United States and Nato."

These are strong words from a man whose long diplomatic experience has instilled in him a concern for even-handedness which occasionally leads him to extend charity beyond the strict demands of objectivity. The admirable tendency to give weight to both sides of every argument can sometimes obscure the truth of the maxim that "some things are evil, cruel and ugly, and no amount of fine writing will make them good, kind and beautiful."

On the other hand, Sir Clive's Diplomatic Service training is revealed in another characteristic for which those who read him will be grateful. He must have been one of those officials who is known appreciatively in the Foreign Office as a good draftsman, which is to say that he writes not only to set out arguments clearly and to advance a point of view based upon them, but to do so with maximum economy. His style is therefore direct and uncluttered and refreshingly clear of the obscure jargon and baroque decoration which disfigures so much contemporary writing on international politics. His book is not only a valuable introduction to the problem of the enemy within for anyone coming new to the subject; it is also a field service manual for those already deeply engaged in the battle.

Let-off for Ridley as Labour squabble

NEIL KINNOCK has been forced to intervene — so far unsuccessfully — to try to settle a row between Labour's two transport spokesmen, Gwyneth Dunwoody and Peter Snape, which threatens to undermine the Opposition's attack on Government policies.

Snape, an ex-railwayman whose sharp tongue has frequently bested Transport Secretary Nicholas Ridley in Commons exchanges, has been silenced by Mrs Dunwoody, his superior by virtue of having been elected to the Shadow Cabinet.

His performance in the House has, apparently, been overshadowing hers and as a result relations between the pair have deteriorated to the point where neither is speaking to the other.

Meanwhile, Ridley, who has been worried by Snape's attacks, which forced the virtual abandonment of the Civil Aviation Bill, a humiliating Tory rebellion on Stansted, and added to the Government's difficulties over its court defeat on grants to London Transport, is breathing a very long sigh of relief.

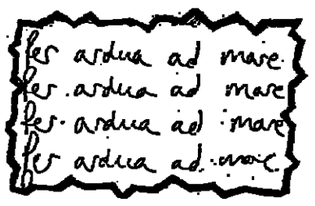
TODAY'S name game can disclose that aircrew employed by the old British Eagle airline included a Hazard, a Grief, a Breakall and a Bendall.

And that the agent for Union Cable in Lourenco Marques in 1959 was Ben Down, who had a daughter called Ida and a son called Neil.



Brian Caven, a classics lecturer at Birkbeck College, is among a number of readers who have taken me to task for confusing my Latin in Tuesday's heading "Per ardua ad marem." Since sea is neuter in Latin I should, of course, have written "Per ardua ad mare" and Caven, rightly, has ordered me to write this out 100 times. I have, and the lines are in the post.

Goldfigure

THE latest target for collectors of first editions of books would appear to be Ian Fleming, whose James Bond novels are expected to fetch up to £150 at an auction in London next week (Feb. 27).

A first edition of "Thunderball," published in 1961 and signed by the author to Henry Longhurst, is expected to reach that figure and original copies of "On Her Majesty's Secret Service," "You Only Live Twice" and "The Man with the Golden Gun" are likely to go for as much as £60, rather more than the complete 24 volume set of the 1947 Encyclopaedia Britannica which is also up for sale.

LONDON DAY BY DAY

Loneliness . . .

A CORRESPONDENT in Colombo tells me of a conversation he had earlier this month with the two Britons, Henry Weston and Robin Cross, who are part-way through a 16,000 mile round-the-world run.

The two men—who each expect to wear-out 75 pairs of running shoes and set off more than 10 months ago—were en route to southern India to run via Cape Comorin to Madras and Calcutta.

Although in good shape they were suffering from stomach troubles and were slightly dispirited by the lack of interest in their epic journey—but they are determined to soldier on regardless.

Once upon a time

PERHAPS with Tuesday's Commons debate on fluoridation still ringing in their ears, Rowntree Mackintosh yesterday announced sponsorship for the biggest ever children's book award. The winning author of the "Smartie Prize" will take £8,000, a large sum even by the standards of adult book awards.

National Book League chairman Martyn Goff, anxious to stem the tide of video games and television swamping our children, has also formed an alliance of publishers to back the project and hopes to create a junior version of the Booker Prize.

Holding the corner

THE DUKE OF KENT is to attend a ceremony in the City church of St Mary Woolnoth, Lombard Street, next month to rededicate a corner to people born in Kent who now live in the capital.

A Kent corner was originally installed in the 1930s in the church of St Andrew-by-the-Wardrobe, but was lost when the church was destroyed by German bombing in 1940. Only two wrought iron candlesticks and a remembrance book survived and they were taken to St Mary Woolnoth when a corner of that church was dedicated to the county in 1957.

That fell into disuse too but is now being revived with the support of the Association of Men of Kent and Kentish Men and their patron, the Duke.

EXPECT to hear more of solicitors Stoneham Langton & Passmore, based in Piccadilly. Clive Thornton, enfant terrible of the Abbey National Building Society and chief executive of the Daily Mirror group until Robert Maxwell's sudden takeover, has become a non-executive partner.

Non-executive partners are virtually unheard of in the legal world—retiring partners become consultants—but Thornton will attend monthly management meetings and bi-monthly partnership meetings. Thornton has never kept a low profile in the past, so I presume he will be taking up the role of all-purpose legal spokesman.

South Atlantic relics

STEPS ARE being taken by the Falkland Islands Development Corporation to give the colony a museum after two abortive attempts over the years.

The original museum in Port Stanley's old wooden town hall was burnt down in 1944 by what locals insist was a servicemen's cigarette. A valuable collection of wreck memorabilia and stuffed birds was lost.

A second collection was put into storage after the Argentine invasion and its premises are now used as an oil store. A search is now on for a building to house a permanent museum highlighting the islands' bird-life, agriculture, wrecks — and of course the experience of war.

Taking wing

A COLONY of pipistrelle bats, which has taken up voluntary residence in a building at Whipsnade Zoo, appears to have pre-empted the authorities there by several months.

The zoo is in the process of building an artificial bat cave in a trench in the side of the Chiltern chalk hill on which Whipsnade is built. There are also plans to erect bat boxes in local woods to house what zoologists clearly hope will be a burgeoning nocturnal population.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

COAL MINING MADE COMPETITIVE

From Mr PETER ROST, M P (Con.)

SIR—Whatever other beneficial results follow the mining dispute to compensate for its cost, the most relevant to the industry's future must be the belated realisation that nationalisation has been a failure.

It has brought weak, inefficient management: the industry has suffered industrial warfare rather than industrial relations. Lack of financial incentive and motivation has brought too low productivity gains. Marketing has been uncommercial.

If management has been dismally ineffective, the blame must lie with the politicians. Government not only set up the structure of the industry but allowed a powerful union to run it. Management has been expected to manage with both hands tied by Government and a pistol held to its head by the National Union of Mineworkers. No Government until the present one has had the political courage even to tiptoe into an industry that has for too long been regarded as politically dangerous territory.

The present administration must now move the coal industry to the top of its priority list for privatisation. Surely there can be no dispute that the social and economic arguments advanced in support of nationalisation in 1946 are still relevant.

Open-cast mining produces 15 million tons a year under private enterprise despite an impost of £16 a ton royalty to the National Coal Board.

The National Association of Licensed Opencast Operators has complained for years that the Board abuses its statutory monopoly and restricts the granting of licences. The Association claims that it is not recognised as part of the coal mining industry and there are no appeals against the Board's arbitrary and dilatory policy on licensing. Surely, there is an overwhelming case for the open-cast business to be set free from the NCB to operate independently.

We also have deep mines run by private enterprise. Over 100 small pits produce less than one million tons — which is hardly surprising as the 1946 Act prohibits the employment of more than 30 miners in a private mine. This monopoly restriction should be removed.

The monopoly should also be broken by allowing new coal reserves to be licensed to private sector firms. If it works for oil and gas, why not for coal? Is it not ridiculous that the major British companies with world-leading mining expertise, should have to mine coal in America and Australia yet are shut out from investing in our own industry? The next new mines, such as Selby and Vale of Belvoir should be offered to the private sector.

It has been estimated that under efficient management we could produce around 80 million tons of coal a year competitive with world prices. If, for strategic or social reasons, Government decided that we needed more, the marginally uneconomic output desired could continue to be subsidised.

But would not the taxpayer be assured of better value for money if such subsidies were made available to private operators, rather than squandered by the National Coal Board? After all, we support farmers to ensure adequate production. That does not require Government to own the farms or to run them.

The economic case for opening up a flourishing private sector, in competition to the nationalised sector, is beyond dispute. Political acceptability surely presents less of a hurdle than some suspect. Disillusionment and frustration with the failure of the nationalised industry to do the job, expresses itself not just among the mass of voters. It is widespread at all levels within the coal industry.

How one theatre thrives at another's expense

SIR—The letter by Sir Peter Hall (Feb. 16), prompted by Mr Eric Shorter's article, throws into relief the anachronism of arts subsidies within a free economy. Mr John Barber referred to the subject in his article (Feb. 18).

The number of seats at the Cottesloe approximates to that of the Fortune Theatre of which I am the director.

It is said that their income is one-third of their expenditure, and the conclusion is that they cannot properly continue.

The old-fashioned concept to which Mr Micawber subscribed also affects my theatre, and every penny needed to pay rent, rates, taxes, iniquitous Value Added Tax, wages, suppliers and producers must be raised through the box office. If I fail I go bankrupt—not to the Arts Council.

Admittedly my salary is not that of Sir Peter's, nor is my wages bill, my manning levels nor my suppliers' extravagances. The National Theatre will claim that they subscribe to excellence and raise the standards of live theatre. Indeed they do, and at my expense.

It is my taxes which are used to subsidise their productions to attract my customers. I am levied by the theatrical organisation, to which I must needs belong, in order to raise funds to lobby Parliament to increase my competitors' subsidies.

We all recognise that some subsidies are desirable to nourish emerging talent and sustain arts in special categories like opera. But I fail to see why selective and massive support to major enterprises like the National Theatre should be made at the expense of those sharing their identical market.

There will be no shortage of those anxious to tell me how misguided I am, or how unfashionable.

PAUL GANE

Shakespeare for all

SIR—In his letter headed "Unfair Allocation of Arts Funds" (Feb. 15) Mr A. B. Briggs claims that the arts subsidy received by the four national companies amounts to a "scandalous" 30 per cent. of the allocation available for the country overall.

The thrust of Mr Briggs's argument is that few people outside London benefit from the arts subsidy as so much is "unfairly" distributed in London.

The Royal Shakespeare Company is a truly "national" company for, in addition to a London base, it has its headquarters in Stratford-upon-Avon and performs an extended season in Newcastle upon Tyne each year.

It also tours annually for a minimum of 15 weeks to remote parts of the United Kingdom. Therefore a large proportion of its annual subsidy is spent outside London for the benefit of regional audiences.

Rescue at sea

SIR—A few days ago my colleagues and I, on a fishing trip off the Kent Coast, had engine trouble.

It was getting dark, the weather was cold and wet and we were drifting fast with the tide. We signalled SOS to passing ships and fortunately for us, our signal was received by a Trinity House flagship Patricia. Through the skill of the crew, and the leadership of the captain, we were taken back to our mooring at Southend.

We cannot show enough respect and admiration for these brave people.

Political priorities

SIR—With reference to your "Personal View," (Feb. 11) we should like to state our own view of the matter concerned.

If Mrs Thatcher would change her priorities, and devote her undoubted tenacity of purpose and ability to the problems of unemployment and the plight of young people, who seek to become useful citizens of our community, then a third term could be her greatest yet, and a blessing to our nation.

School closed

SIR—Mr A. H. Atkins seeks to know how many grammar schools were abolished during Mrs Thatcher's tenure of the Ministry of Education.

It was she who was responsible for the closure in 1975 of the ancient foundation of Earls Colne Grammar School, Essex, at which I was then a teacher.

Unfairness to former prisoners of war

SIR—Politicians do not have the prerogative of deliberately misleading Parliament. Civil servants acting in their name, but without their direct approval, have also been guilty in the past and any measures which may now be taken to prevent such practices must embrace them as well.

An example is a matter which came to light over four years ago and has gone on ever since—the assertion by former prisoners of war that they were defrauded of part of their pay. In its attempts to refute this the Ministry of Defence has laid emphasis on the fact that these matters had been considered by the Public Accounts Committee in 1947.

The record of that meeting still exists. No mention was made by officials that, when the rates of exchange to be used when calculating advances in pay from the enemy were negotiated in 1940, HMG had recognised that these were unfair to officers who had been taken prisoner (though this had not been made public).

This omission was serious enough in itself but what is even more reprehensible is that at that time the department concerned, the War Office, was the lead department in the international negotiations for the revision of the Geneva Convention.

One of the main items was the revision of the arrangements regarding rates of exchange which were acknowledged to have been unfair to many ex-PoWs including our officers.

It is not credible that the War Office was so inefficient that officials from the department concerned with such matters were unaware of the facts and the conclusion must be drawn that the truth was being concealed from the PAC.

I venture to suggest that this has not been the only occasion on which officials have appeared before Select Committees of the House with loaded briefs.

Waiting for surgery

SIR—Closure of cardiac surgery at Westminster Hospital is proposed by Victoria District Health Authority, at a time when this country is not able to offer coronary artery by-pass surgery to an estimated 10,000 persons a year.

In 1982 there were 7,400 coronary operations in the United Kingdom. Recent reports from Australia and United States indicate that 410-750 coronary operations per million population are needed, and recent British estimates suggest a more conservative figure of 300 per million.

This translates into 17,000 operations, or a short-fall of about 10,000 a year which explains the long and growing waiting lists for cardiac surgery in many parts of this country.

The closure proposal is part of an attempted rationalisation of cardiac surgery facilities in London. A new National Heart and Brompton Hospital, to be built in Kensington, will be able to perform 2,500 operations, 1,000 more than in these two existing hospitals.

But this provision, which could eventually absorb Westminster patients, will not be available for about six years. There is no spare capacity in the North-West Thames Region at present, and closure of our unit will simply add to waiting lists and to the large short-fall in coronary operations.

Bombing casualties

SIR—While reading the sympathetic letters about the Dresden air raids, it occurred to us: how many remember the Bath Blitz?

An undefended city of great beauty with Georgian and Roman interests and peaceful citizens going about their business—yet the Germans thought fit to abruptly terminate hundreds of lives in a couple of nights.

Many of the victims died in slow agony, so how about some sympathetic remembrance for these long dead people and all those others in our island whose future years were taken away from them?

Wit versus knowledge

SIR—Mr Ivan Chapman's reference to the absence of quotations in recent crossword puzzles is one which I, too, have noticed. For me, as a poorly read solver, this is a welcome exclusion.

£375,000 grant to reopen the Cottesloe theatre

By JOHN GRIGSBY Local Government Correspondent

A SPECIAL grant of £375,000 to enable the National Theatre to reopen its Cottesloe Theatre was agreed in principle by the Greater London Council's Arts and Recreation Committee yesterday.

The theatre will close on April 20 as planned, but now it could reopen in July, with the money funding operations for nine months.

Sir Peter Hall, director of the National Theatre, which includes the Cottesloe, announced the closure after the Arts Council said its grant increase would be only 1·9 per cent.

Last night he commented: "We are immensely grateful to the GLC for its support. It strengthens an association with us which goes back a long way."

Mr Peter Pitt, chairman of the arts committee, said about 100 jobs were at stake. The April closure date could not be cancelled because of staff problems and others involving plays and rehearsals.

'Great institution'

He continued: "The GLC cannot stand by and witness the gradual destruction of a great national institution, the very foundation and existence of which owes so much to the GLC."

The extra grant depends on the council's base budget for 1985-86 remaining intact in spite of rate-capping. The council's final budgets have not yet been approved.

The Conservative opposition on the committee supported the measure but Mr Robert Huges, its spokesman said he was worried by the speed with which Sir Peter announced the Cottesloe's closure.

Bitter attack

Later Mr Hughes bitterly attacked the Labour group for grants totalling more than £6 million to pay for the upkeep of parks and sports facilities in some Labour-controlled boroughs including Southwark Lewisham, Lambeth, Camden and Haringey. Hackney will receive up to £2·2 million.

He described the grants as "probably the worst example of political corruption I have ever seen by this GLC." They had been made as prizes "for political purity to their class allies in the Left-wing boroughs."

Mr Pitt replied that any London boroughs could have applied for help. But the "mean and parsimonious" Tory boroughs had not done so whereas the Labour ones had.

ROYAL COURT CASH U.S. PRODUCER'S OFFER

ROBIN STRINGER writes: An American producer has come to the aid of the Royal Court Theatre, traditional London home of the radical playwright, which is threatened by the Arts Council's refusal to increase its £503,000 grant.

The producer, Joe Papp, has offered the Court $50,000 a year if it can find a matching private contribution in Britain.

A admirer of the Court's work, he has operated an exchange between it and his Public Theatre in New York fo rthe past three years.

Max Stafford-Clark, the Court's artistic director, has been seeking business support in Britain and is hopeful of matching the offer.

"It seems it is easier to achieve recognition for standards of excellence abroad than at home," he said, adding that his company's current six-week appearance in New York, in Michael Hastings' "Tom and Viv," was out in three days.

Plans to raise money are part of a strategy being worked out by Matthew Evans, managing director of publishers, Faber and Faber, who has just become chairman of the English Stage Company which runs the Court.

£20m FOR 3 STATELY HOMES

By ROBERT BEDLOW Estates Correspondent

THE Government is preparing to underwrite the future of three major stately homes and their contents by at least £20 million.

An announcement is expected in the Commons today by Mr Waldegrave, Environment Under-Secretary.

It is understood that Weston Park, on the Staffordshire-Shropshire border, Kedleston Hall, Derbyshire and the Chippendale collection at Nostell Priory, West Yorkshire, will be accepted "in lieu" of the crippling capital transfer tax bills their owners face.

Heritage fund

The money, it is believed, will be passed to the National Heritage Memorial Fund, which is responsible for funding the future of Britain's heritage.

The fund, under the chairmanship of Lord Charteris, has been involved in talks with the owners of the houses and the Government and other conservation bodies, including the National Trust and National Heritage.

How the money will be distributed, and what schemes are accepted by the Government to save the treasures for the nation is not yet clear. All three owners face different problems and have put up their own schemes as to how they can avoid disposing of the houses and contents by auction.

£6m tax bill

Lord Bradford, owner of Weston Park, with a £8 million tax bill, is prepared to offer Weston's contents to the nation, transfer the house and park to a charitable trust and establish a £3,500,000 endowment fund for maintenance.

Lord Scarsdale at Kedleston faces a £2,500,000 tax bill and wants the superb Adam house and contents to go to the National Trust.

Lord St Oswald at Nostell Priory, which is already owned by the National Trust, wants the multi-million pound collection of Chippendale furniture there accepted in lieu of about 3 million in tax.

A "dream come true" for Daniel Dobbin, 8, of Church Crookham, Hants, when he was invited yesterday to spend a day as guest of the Gurkhas after being caught running away from home to join the regiment. He is pictured with Captain Rambahadur Limbu, the army's only serving holder of the Victoria Cross, who retires next month.

'LONDON OLYMPICS' CLASH

By VALERIE ELLIOTT Political Staff

A POLITICAL row has erupted following a report that the Prime Minister and Government ministers are intending to bid to hold the 1992 Olympic Games in London.

Many politicians have targetted 1992 as a possible election year and the feeling is that Mrs Thatcher and the Conservative party want to use the great pull of the Olympiad to grasp the electorate.

The Government line is, however, that the reports are speculative, and that although it might have been mooted a good idea, nothing definite had been done about it, and it was not being seriously considered.

However, Mr Howell yesterday demanded a full statement on the matter from Mr Macfarlane, Sports Minister, although he and the Labour party support a British bid for the Olympic Games they are most concerned about the financing of such a world event.

He estimated that it would cost £1,000 million for London to host the Games, and believed this would have to come from public funds.

With an increasing number of cutbacks at home, Mr Howell believes it is insensitive and impractical to consider the option.

His colleague Dr John Cunningham, Shadow labour spokesman, was concerned how such an event could possibly be organised in London without an elected authority to speak for the capital.

Welcoming the proposal to try to clinch the 1992 Games for Britain, he added: "But alone among the European cities seeking the 1992 Olympics, London will have no council, mayor or political leader speaking on its behalf, which is necessary under the international Olympic Committee regulations.

"It is obvious from recent experience that a voice for London will be essential for success. Cities always host the Olympics, not countries."

By SARAH THOMPSON Education Staff

UNIVERSITY vice-chancellors are "incredibly weak" in allowing students to dictate who may or may not speak on their campuses, a Conservative MP who has three times been turned away from college speaking engagements in the last few months, said yesterday.

Mr John Carlise, a Monday Club member and MP for Luton North, was turned away by "anti-racist" demonstrators at York University last November.

Authorities of Lancashire Polytechnic and Loughborough University ruled in recent weeks that it would be "unsafe" for him to fulfil engagements to speak on their campuses.

Last night York's Conservative students were in danger of being turned out of their union for re-inviting Mr Carlisle. This is despite the fact that the university's Senior Assistant Registrar, Mr Peter Smith, has had counsel's advice that the students' union must not hinder free expression of opinion within the law by anyone invited by a member of the union.

Mr Carlisle said yesterday "There has been no statement from Conservative Central Office to back the Conservative students," and the vice-chancellors are being incredibly weak in not insisting that students' unions drop their "No Platform" policies.

"There has been no statement from the Education Department either," he added.

"In the cases where student disruption has caused me to be turned away, I have never received even a letter of apology from the university heads."

Mr Smith said yesterday that York University was determined to "uphold the terms of its charter" demanding free speech.

Another speech

"The union will not be allowed to persist in its policy and as the body which funds the student union, the university would be able to apply financial sanctions. But it is all much more complicated than it might appear."

Unless the university cancels the meeting, Mr Carlisle fully intends to speak again at York next month.

"I shall be talking about sporting links with South Africa this time. I usually win quite a few in the audience over to my view on that one," he said.

Nilsen's fits of remorse never last for long

DENNIS NILSEN, the multiple murderer, considered changing his name to Stephen Sinclair, the last of his 15 victims, in a fit of remorse, it is revealed in his life story "Killing for Company," published today.

Awaiting trial, he noted in a prison journal: "I must keep their memory alive. I must be reminded constantly and never be allowed to forget."

In Brixton prison he drew pictures of the dead bodies as he remembered them. They appear under the title "Sad Sketches" in the book.

Nilsen, 39, a former policeman and civil servant, is now serving a minimum of 25 years in Wakefield top security jail.

For eight months he wrote letters and filled 50 exercise books describing his case for the book's author, Mr Brian Masters. The murderer calls himself an ex-killer for whom a new life has begun.

Mr Masters said: "Des has had periods of remorse, but they never last for long. He says: 'If I felt guilty all the time, I would go out of my mind. I have to protect myself'."

Scargill a hero

Nilson, jailed at the Old Bailey in November, 1983, has admitted that capital punishment would have been a relief. He contemplated suicide, but feared it would be seen as cowardice.

Mr Masters, who has written five books on French literature and a history of British dukedoms, said Nilsen was now horrified by some of the accounts of his murders, though he wrote them himself.

"He says the book is far more frightening because ordinary people can see he is in a way like them, an ordinary man come to an extraordinary conclusion."

Mr Masters said: "I am the only visitor he sees now. He relies on me even as a go-between with his family. As a man, I find him good company, entertaining, articulate, intelligent.

"We can talk about anything that interests him. It might be Arthur Scargill—a great hero to him—or Faure's Requiem, to which he is devoted. He reads voraciously, four of five books a week, mostly Scottish history."

Nilsen will not benefit from the sales of "Killing for Company" and the author said Nilsen had not interfered with his analysis of the killer. "Killing for Company" is published by Jonathan Cape at £10·95.

Alcoholic burglar died after landlord hit him

AN inquest jury returned a misadventure verdict yesterday on a burglar who died after being punched by a pub landlord.

WILLIAM STOTHARD, 46, of Fynford Road, Coventry, a chronic alcoholic, might have survived but for the amount of drink he had had, said pathologist Dr TIMOTHY ASHWORTH.

Cause of death was heart failure following a brain haemorrhage due to a blow on the jaw.

The coroner, Mr DAVID SARGINSON, was told that the Director of Public Prosecutions has decided to take no action against Mr DANNY COLGAN, landlord of the Grapes in Radford Road, Coventry.

He confronted three men behind the pub last Nov. 7. They came for him, one carrying an iron bar.

He told police later: "They were coming towards me to have a go so I hit them, but only once."

The two survivors were subsequently given a suspended two-months prison sentence for attempted burglary. They are Mark Rooney, 40, of Albany Road and Robert Donnelly, 34, of Fowler Road.

Two men hunted after killing of marquess's son-in-law

By T. A. SANDROCK Crime Correspondent

POLICE hunting the killers of the son-in-law of the Marquess of Normanby, last night issued the descriptions of two men to all air and sea ports.

At first it was believed that Adam Sedgwick, 32, was the innocent victim of a shooting concerning a drugs deal which was linked to the address in Fabian Road, Fulham, where the killing took place. Later theft was thought to be the motive.

Mr Sedgwick, who had been separated from his wife, Lady Henrietta, one of the Marquess's four daughters, for 12 months, had been living at the flat, owned by a property dealer friend, for about two weeks.

Mr Neil Smith, 30, the owner of the flat, and a woman friend were on a visit when two men, both carrying shotguns, arrived.

Police are not yet clear about what happened but threats were made and Mr Sedgwick "had a go" and was shot twice in the head, dying immediately.

Before the gunmen left they took £30 from Mr Smith and his woman friend and also took the dead man's wallet. It was thought to contain a substantial sum, possibly £1,000.

The man leading the hunt, Det Supt Graham Seaby, said: "It was a vicious and calculated murder. Mr Sedgwick appears to have been gunned down when he protested at being robbed."

The two gunmen were both white and one was bearded. Residents saw them running along the street shortly after the shooting in the early hours of Tuesday morning.

Mr Sedgwick is believed to have been working on a television documentary about under world crime but police said there was no link between this and death.

Although police are treatnig the motive as robbery there have been persistent reports of drug dealing in the area and they believe the gunmen are closly involved with addicts.

He had been living at a rented flat in Fulham for some months prior to moving into the top flat of the premises in Fabian Road.

He married Lady Henrietta Phipps in June 1982. His mother is a magistrate at Horseferry Road court and the family home is in the West Country.

ROCKET ACCIDENT

AMERICAN and local investment buyers were again operating in the industrial sections of London stock markets yesterday, with interest concentrated on the shares of big exporting companies. General sentiment was also helped by further developments on the takeover front and by the feeling that many more bid and mergers may take place over the next few months.

Numerous bright features appeared throughout the lists and, although prices often eased from the best on professional profit-taking, the final tone was still quite good. The main market indices reflected the day's fluctuations, the "30" index closing 3·8 higher at 981·3, after 988·3 and the "100" index 0·1 easier at 1275·8, after 1281·9.

Further speculation regarding the outlook for the eagerly-awaited quarterly figures from Imperial Chemical Industries (due next Thursday) prompted a new upsurge in the share price, which jumped to a peak level of 877p before closing 7p firmer at 869p. Vague takeover suggestions accompanied renewed interest in Imperial Group, 7 better at 210p, after 212p.

Early market action was dominated by news of Trafalgar House's £180 million rights issue and the company's takeover offer for Haden. Dealers said there was considerable interest in the underwriting for Trafalgar's issue, although the share price ended 12 lower at 336p. Haden shares soared to 297p before closing 54 higher at 288p.

The Haden takeover news sparked interest in other companies in a similar line of business, with Victor Products 18 up at 116p, Matthew Hall, 14 higher at 320p, and Martonair, 15 better at 345p. Bid whispers directed attention to Weir Group, at 54½p, and Delta Group, at 125p, both around 5p firmer.

Initial rose to 540p in response to the renewed takeover offer from B E T, but were finally 5p easier at 528p. B E T themselves closed 10 down at 235p. A rising trend in Goode Durrant & Murray was accelerated by the lunchtime announcement of a bid approach and the shares finished the session 18 higher at 66p.

Yet another bid approach, this time for Seccombe Marshall & Campion brought late strength in the share price, finally 55p higher at 375p. First National Finance Corporation, an old favourite in the takeover stakes, improved to 104½p, while Wagon Finance rose 6 to 69p on further consideration of the recent figures.

Government securities opened on a firm note and prices showed gains of up to about £½ in the first hour of business. However, dealers kept a close watch on the sterling indicator boards and, with the rate slipping, the tone of the market deteriorated, albeit in thin trading. The final picture saw the printed price lists with little alteration.

In the drinks sector, Allied-Lyons met solid demand and closed 5 up at 176p, while Bass were 6 to the good at 511p. Cider makers, H P Bulmer, were the subject of revived bid speculation and ended 5 better at 148p.

Leading building shares were narrowly irregular in the absence of anything more than routine interest, but buyers came for Henderson Group, 14 higher at 300p, Scapa Group, 10 better at 510p, and Wiggins Group, 2 firmer at 45p.

T I Group met renewed speculative interest up to 245p before closing 4 better at 238p, but Jaguar met profit-taking and ended 4 off at 328p, after 326p.

Some American demand was reported for Lucas Industries, 5 higher at 258p, after 262p, while transatlantic interest lifted Reuters B 20 to 368p. British Aerospace were also wanted at 381p, a rise of 11p, on suggestions that brokers were recommending the shares to overseas investors.

The announcement that the Pleasurama bid was not to be referred to the Monopolies Commission left Trident Television 8 better at 243p. Fleet Holdings shot up 20 to 285p on market whispers that the group may decide not to pursue negotiations with Aitken Hume, 7 off at 176p, after 175p.

News of bid discussions left London & Strathclyde 12 higher at 321p, while there was sudden support for Edinburgh Fund, which jumped 40 to 285p. Demand ahead of the figures (expected on March 11) strengthened Low & Bonar, 15 higher at 321p. American buyers came for Saatchi & Saatchi, which advanced 30 to 880p.

Cope Allman, still reflecting the good profit figures, were another 11 higher at 164p, after 169p. Satisfactory results prompted gains in Waterford Glass, 2½ better at 48p, and British Kidney Association, 15 up at 128p. Vague bid speculation accounted for gains in Hawtin, at 18¼, Brook Street Bureau, at 111p, after 115p, and L C P Holdings, at 116p.

Plessey, due to announce third quarterly figures today, advanced to 180p before closing 4 better at 176p. Muirhead, whose full year figures are expected today, jumped 18 to 192p, while Microvitec (results due on Monday) were 6 better at 71p. A B Electronic advanced to 438p on news of the Olivetti rescue of Acorn Computers before closing 20 higher at 420p.

Carclo Engineering were heartened by news of the partial sale of the Indian subsidiary and the shares finished 18 to the good at 228p. Hongkong issues were firm in line with Far Eastern advices, with Jardine Matheson, at 126p, and Hutchison Whampoa, at 258p, both 8 higher.

In a generally quiet property sector, Stock Conversion advanced 15 to 435p on a fresh outbreak of takeover speculation. New Cavendish Estates gained 5 to 85p after the interim report.

Stores continued to move irregularly, but Marks & Spencer met American demand and closed 7 up at 130p, after 131p. Vantona were wanted ahead of next Tuesday's results and ended 11 higher at 307p, while buyers also favoured Dawson International, at 504p, and Allied Textile, at 378p.

Trading in the oil share market left much to be desired and prices tended easier. British Petroleum slipped 4 to 566p and "Shell" 7 to 778p. Premier Consolidated were unchanged at 48p despite market suggestions that Ivan Boesky had completed the sale of all, or at least a large part of his holding. Dealers believe that Premier are oversold, but expressed scepticism about whispers that Tricentrol was planning an offer for the company.

Bullion was unchanged at $302·75, but gold shares tended easier in the absence of investment interest. Platinums lost ground on further consideration of Impala's disappointing figures. Impala themselves fell £⅝ more to £10½, while Lydenburg were 45 down at 550p.

Tailpiece

IN OUR January 9 mention of Prince of Wales Hotels, at 98p, we commented on market suggestions that the company was "up for grabs" following Comfort Hotels' unsuccessful offer, which was stymied by Ladbroke Group's bid for Comfort Hotels itself.

We suggested that the United States company, Quality Inns, might find the "elegance" image of the Prince of Wales properties irresistible and yesterday's statement that Quality Inns has increased its stake in Prince of Wales Hotels from 11 p.c. to 20 p.c. indicates that we were on the right track.

It appears that Quality Inns has exercised its option to buy a further 9 p.c. from Taddale Investments, which previously owned 60 p.c. of the Prince of Wales equity. In the circumstances, it is reasonable to suppose that Quality Inns will make a full-scale offer in due course. Prince of Wales shares are now 112p and should be retained.

Bid approach for Seccombe Marshall

The company's shares jumped 55p to 275p on the news, increasing its stock market value by nearly £1m to £6m.

Seccombe chairman, David Campion, would not comment on the approach. He noted, however, that the future of discount houses in the changing City environment looks "very confused."

Waterford ahead

WATERFORD Glass, the Irish lead-crystal to department stores group, has had a record 1984 with pre-tax profits rising from IR10·2m to IR14·6m on sales 15 p.c. higher at IR245m. The company continues to benefit from the strength of the dollar and a high level of demand for its crystal and china products.

Questor—P23

Goode Durrant bid

THE stock market value of banking and property group, Goode Durrant & Murray, rose from £11·5m to £15·8m yesterday following news of a bid approach.

Chairman Lionel Robinson, recently announced a decline from £2·62m to £2·57m in taxable profits for the year to October 1984.

Rowland's rise

LONRHO chief executive Tiny Rowland last year received a 22 p.c. pay rise, to £322,861. In his annual statement with the latest accounts Mr Rowland refers to the groups cash balances of £266m, after the proceeds of the sale of its House of Fraser shares last year, and adds that the forthcoming Monopolies Commission report "will have a direct bearing on our future policy regarding House of Fraser."

Society receipts fall

A STEEP fall in building society net receipts following the decision not to raise savers' or borrowers' interest rates, means that net cash inflow is likely to be only about £500m this month compared with January's £823m.

This is less than the £800m necessary to meet mortgage demand, but societies are still highly liquid.

Dollar struggle

THE Australian dollar continued to struggle against the American dollar yesterday, closing in Sydney at a low of 67·45 cents. Dealers said the market was more subdued than in recent days, aided by an agreement to quote only 50 point buy/sell spreads on maximum parcels of A$2M.

In the stock market foreign investment buying helped lift the Sydney all ordinaries index 3·5 points to a peak of 798·9.

Guinness opposed

THE attempt by Guinness Peat to change its name to Guinness Mahon, as an indication that its main business is now financial services as opposed to the previous banking and commodity trading mixture, failed yesterday when Lord Kissin, the founder of the group, was one of two substantial shareholders to vote against the resolution.

German record

WEST German share prices made another strong showing yesterday with the Commerzbank index achieving a high for the second consecutive day to close 7·5 points up at 1,188·50.

Dealers reported demand from domestic and foreign investors, prompted by expectations that strong exports will lead to higher corporate earnings.

Olivetti rescues Acorn in £12m rights package

By MICHAEL BECKET

OLIVETTI, the Italian electronics and office equipment group, is buying 49·3 p.c. of Acorn Computer Group as part of a rescue package which will raise £12·1 million through a rights issue for the maker of the BBC computer. The rescue is needed because in the second half of last year Acorn made a net after-tax loss of £11 million.

As part of the reconstruction, Barclays Bank is making another £6 million loan facility available on condition the Olivetti deal goes through. Acorn's loss compares with a profit of £1·8 million for the same period the previous year, and with a profit of £6 million for the full financial year to July 1, 1984.

Most of the disaster last year was the result of an abortive attempt to enter the American and German markets. This represented the second try at getting into America, but the cost was even higher than at the first attempt.

Activities in the two countries produced not only a trading loss of more than £2 million during the half year, but also a £6·4 million write-off to cover the cost of pulling out. On top of that, pre-Christmas sales in the UK of both the BBC and Electron computers fell well short of targets.

The latest figures include a £17 million write-down of stocks and this also covers inducements to retailers to take stagnant stock.

These blows came at a time when the company was "overextending itself very widely" according to Alexander Reid, brought in three weeks ago to help the rescue as acting chief executive and promoted to chairman under the reconstruction. Acorn got into several venture investments, plus a range of joint ventures, and many of these will now be sold off, he added yesterday.

These extra costs meant operating profits were down to £4·1 million compared with £5 million for the comparable half year, although turnover had risen 36 p.c. to £55 million. When Acorn's problems became generally suspected, the shares plunged and were suspended on Feb. 6 at 28p, compared with last year's high of 193p.

At least six serious offers of help came from financial institutions and trading companies. But Rodney Kent, managing director of Close Brothers, Acorn's new merchant bank, said the attraction of Olivetti is its combination of finance, electronics, and widespread marketing.

The basis of the package is a 27-for-20 rights issue at 8p a share to raise £12·1 million. Hermann Hauser and Christopher Curry, founders of Acorn, renounce their rights to Olivetti which will thereby get 49·3 p.c. of the enlarged capital while the founders' stake drops from 85·7 p.c. to 36·5 p.c. Olivetti also gets the right to buy more of the founders' shares at 8p to raise its holding to 50·1 p.c.

Both Dr Hauser, who was chairman, and Mr Curry, who was managing director, are to become deputy chairmen. Their salaries remain unchanged but Olivetti made its help conditional on their extending their service contracts. The search for a new managing director is well advanced.

● Despite Acorn's burnt fingers and his own previous failure to establish a foothold in America Sir Clive Sinclair yesterday announced a renewed assault on the United States. Nigel Searle, currently managing director of Sinclair Research, is to head the new operation which will start by marketing the QL computer to be followed quickly by a wristwatch radio and the small flat-screen television.

BET revises Initial terms on go-ahead

By JOHN RUDOFSKY

BRITISH Electric Traction was yesterday given a clean bill of health by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission on its intentions to absorb Initial, the linen hire and contract cleaning group.

BET wasted no time and immediately announced new, revised terms which are slightly lower than the offer finally agreed by the independent Initial directors before the six-month investigation intervened last summer.

BET's new terms are 14 shares plus £13·50 for every 10 Initial shares. With BET closing 10p lower, at 285p, the terms are worth 534p per Initial share, or £169 million for the near-58 p.c. of Initial not already owned by BET.

The new terms compare with the 544p BET finally offered last time and which the independent Initial directors eventually accepted. Then the deal valued the fractionally greater outstanding share capital at £175 million.

The directors have taken a cautious stance this time and will consult again with their advisers before giving their verdict to shareholders.

The ultimate verdict of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission came as little surprise to industry observers who believe the Office of Fair Trading could have come to the same conclusion when BET made its move last summer.

The reference caused considerable surprise. BET was privately furious at having to go through with the expense of another industry examination.

BET already controlled 41 p.c. of Initial and its managing director, Nicholas Wills, had long been Initial's chairman. A 1983 report into bids for Johnson Group Cleaners acknowledged that BET effectively controlled Initial already.

Yesterday's report admitted that the economic benefits of putting BET (which includes Advance Services) together with Initial failed in fact to outweigh the potential detriment to competition in significant parts of the textile workwear rental market.

But it nevertheless gave the deal the go-ahead because BET's shareholding gave it "considerable potential scope for co-ordinating the activities of Advance and Initial."

Dee profits 'should double'

DEE Corporation chairman Alec Monk forecasts pre-tax profits of not less than £56 million in the year to end-April, compared with a 1983-84 pre-tax total of £28·3 million.

He says this will give a rise of earnings of at least 14·6p a share (10·375p) and recommends a final dividend of not less than 3·5p net making 5·75p (4·75p).

The forecasts come in a letter sent to his own Dee shareholders explaining the reasons for the £322 million bid for Booker McConnell.

The results will include first time contributions from International Stores and Lennons. These two deals, says Mr Monk, have been absorbed more easily than expected, which is why Dee has come back so quickly for Booker

The Booker camp, surprised to see detailed arguments in a letter to Dee shareholders rather than in bid documents to Booker shareholders, dismissed Mr Monk's arguments as a ruse to get his own share price up and the Booker price down.

If so the tactics are working, with Dee's shares 5p better at 204p making the terms worth 255p while Booker shares at 249p are now below the offer

Midland Bank forces ship sale over debt

By JOHN PETTY

THE British ship Gothic Wasa, 9,882 tons, will suffer enforced auction in Rotterdam next Wednesday on the application of Midland Bank over a debt of $9·2 million (about £6·36 million).

This is part of a wave of action by creditors to arrest ships and obtain judicial warrants to sell them as shipping companies run into trouble and are unable to pay debts.

The Gothic Wasa is owned by Spanocean Line, of Bristol. The Salenvest Group of Sweden offered it as collateral for a loan from the Midland. Spanocean remained sound, but major parts of Salen are in bankruptcy and Midland has called in the security.

The Cypriot ship Freightline 1 is being held at Tilbury and is to be sold by order of the High Court in another action. Another Cypriot ship, the Gulf Venture, has just been sold at Sharpness and renamed the Progress Liberty.

The Liberian-flag Marsha was recently detained at Avonmouth because of a debt in Italy. The British-built, Greek-flag cargo ship Altair, 25,299 tons, faces enforced sale in Rotterdam next month on a court order.

Bids have been invited for a sheriff's sale in Antwerp of two Belgian bulk carriers following bankruptcy of NV Bulkchartering. There is a similar sale in Singapore of the locally owned Highsea Pride, 15,172 tons. The Pescado II has been held in Rosslare by order of the Admiralty Marshal of Dublin.

Chase Manhattan Bank has made the top bid of $600,000 on the Eddie Steamship bulker Dianna, on which it had a $5 million (about £4·45 million) mortgage. Eddie has been rescued by the Taiwan government, with its active fleet cut from 50 to 15 ships to deal with debts of $220 million (about £200 million) to European and American banks.

CITY COMMENT

Few surprises in Volcker's money targets

THE MIX was much as we have come to expect it. When Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve, makes his semi-annual testimonies to the United States Senate Banking Committee, he usually chooses to emphasise two contrasting themes — the pragmatic and consistent conduct of monetary policy as practised by the Fed and the threat to long-term economic stability posed by the disequilibria which flow primarily from the growing American budget deficit.

There were few surprises in what Mr Volcker had to say about the 1985 money supply targets, which are very much in line with the tentative ranges announced last July. The main focus of policy remains M-1, which is targeted to grow at 4 p.c. to 7 p.c. this year, as opposed to 4 p.c. to 8 p.c. in 1984. The broader aggregates, M2 and M3 have been given exactly the same 6 p.c. to 9 p.c. and 6 p.c. to 9½ p.c. ranges as last year.

Some analysts see something significant in the fact that this represents a ½ p.c. increase at the upper end over the tentative figure set last July, but there seem few grounds for doubting Mr Volcker's assurance that the change is for technical reasons only and is not meant to imply any adjustment of the monetary stance.

As long as the aggregates are kept within the middle of their respective ranges the rise in the money stock should support no more than the 8 p.c. real growth plus inflation which corresponds with the "central tendency" of "forecasts" by senior Fed officials.

Although some of the more hawkish analysts are likely to argue that the assumption of 4 p.c. real growth and inflation in 1985 is not all that restrictive, they should take comfort from the willingness the Fed demonstrated at the end of 1984 to bring to an end the period of easing which began last September.

Nothing in Mr Volcker's testimony suggested that he takes a complacent view of the current inflation numbers, which he believes are depressed somewhat artificially by the strong dollar and weak commodity prices.

Thanks to a return to more normal patterns of money velocity as the effects of financial deregulation wash out, the Fed should be able to interpret more easily the story which the aggregates are telling. If Mr Volcker identifies signs of money growth running too strongly, he will not hesitate to order a squeeze, even if that does imply a consequential rise in interest rates.

On the wider issues of the twin deficits (current account and budget) living with the superdollar and the long-term consequences of America's spectacular switch into foreign indebtedness, Mr Volcker struck his usual warning notes. He reiterated his belief that the United States is living on borrowed money and borrowed time and that there was a serious danger of being "beguiled by tranquil forecasts into a false sense of comfort."

The Fed chairman is horribly conscious of the fact that as long as the economy appears to be delivering the goods there will not be much urgency about the attempts to secure the $50 billion cut in the budget deficits which he reckons is the essential first stage to curbing America's "junky" appetite for foreign credit. The nightmare Mr Volcker has to live with is that when a change in market sentiment comes, it could happen with disastrous speed.

In the meantime, in the absence of actual, as opposed to talked-about, deficit cutting, Mr Volcker must hope that the dollar does remain strong and attractive because even if it implies devastation for America's farmers and export industries, the alternative is too alarming to contemplate.

Revisions on job losses

THE loss of jobs and the numbers of unemployed during the recession was bigger than previously estimated, the Employment Department admitted yesterday. But the total jobs created in the 18 months to September last year has been under estimated.

A re-juggling of the employment figures, based on more up-to-date information and the results from last year's Labour Force Survey was released by the Department along with figures showing a slowdown in productivity last year and an underlying rate of earnings increases of 7½ p.c.

The revised figures show that the number of people dropping off the employment registers in the two years to the middle of 1983 came out at 712,000 against the earlier projection of 513,000. The result was that just over 23 million were at work compared to the 23·23 million shown in the official figures.

But the bounce-back has been faster than the earlier figures have shown. In the year to September the labour force is estimated to have risen by 342,000 compared to the 226,000 in the old set of statistics with 23·49 million at work a drop of 36,000.

The historical message in uncomfortable in political terms for the Government since it means that the number of unregistered unemployed was bigger than imagined. But as Mr King, Employment Secretary, was quick to emphasise yesterday the recovery has been greater than the official figures have indicated, thanks largely to the growth in the numbers of self-employed.

There are doubts about whether the momentum is being maintained, adding to the challenge facing Mr Lawson, Chancellor, to produce a "Budget for Jobs" at a time when there are disturbing indications that manufacturing industry is going through another mini-shakeout.

Earnings are continuing to run ahead of inflation as labour starts to flex a little more muscle and seek a bigger share of rising profits, with the result that unit labour costs are still showing an unhealthy rise. In Japan, West Germany and Canada unit costs are falling and marking time in the United States.

Trafalgar surprises with £181m cash call

TRAFALGAR House yesterday launched a surprise £181 million rights issue, the biggest so far this year, to finance its continuing capital spending programme.

Over and above its spending on capital items and oil and gas, the group simultaneously disclosed takeover bids for Haden, the heating and ventilating contracting group, and Yarrow Shipbuilders.

It is offering 240p cash for each Haden share, valuing the company at £37·2 million, a bid which was quickly rejected by the Haden board. In the market Haden shares jumped 54p to close at 238p. The Yarrow bid is being made through a private tender and terms have not been made public.

The rights issue is on the basis of one new share at 315p for every five currently held, and the announcement prompted a 12p decline in the shares to 356p.

Trafalgar also announced a significant gas discovery in the southern North Sea, in partnership with Texas Gas Exploration (UK).

Cyclical figures cause confusion

THE cyclical economic indicators which traditionally forecast future rates of economic growth are becoming increasingly confused about where the economy is heading.

The longer leading indicators which predict turning points roughly 12 months ahead continue to signal an acceleration of economic activity by the end of the year, but the shorter cyclical indicators continue to turn down, predicting a slowdown in the summer.

Earlier figures had suggested a turning point early this year, but this no longer seems probable from the recent figures, a baffled Central Statistical Office admits.

A slowdown in the summer now seems possible, followed by a fresh acceleration by the end of the year. But the picture is further confused by the failure of the longer and shorter indicators to agree last year and by the effects of industrial disputes, especially the coal strike.

The prospects for the future will also be affected by the steep rise in interest rates last month which will be reflected in the indicators a month from now. The CSO is considering revising the constituents of the indicators, to include for example, a monthly survey of business prospects from the CBI.

Union Discount 'primary' role

UNION DISCOUNT is to apply to the Bank of England for permission to become a primary dealer in the new-look gilt-edged market being planned for the City, chairman Alec Ritchie disclosed yesterday in his annual statement.

Union believes that by developing a gilts dealing operation in addition to its traditional money market operations it can "best serve the expanding interest of our customers."

But according to Mr Ritchie, Union wants to expand "by developing our own resources rather than through acquisition and merger."

City experts believe this means Union will eventually seek additional capital from its shareholders through a "rights" issue. Establishing a primary dealership is expected to require capital of around £20 million.

Halifax chiefs face shake-up

A MAJOR shake-up of management is being planned at the country's largest building society, the £20 billion Halifax, which will reduce the number of deputy chief general managers from three to two and halve the eight managers in the next tier.

Nigel Watson, deputy chief general manager responsible for branches and personnel is expected to be moved into a new role, but Callum Macaskill and Richard Weyway will remain deputies.

The changes follow a study of the society by an American firm of management consultants and were discussed by the board of directors yesterday.

No announcement is due until next month.

Fed gives Wall St a lift

By JAMES SRODES in Washington

NEWS that the United States central bank will leave its 1985 monetary growth targets practically unchanged from last year's levels pulled Wall Street's share prices out of a three-day slump yesterday.

Nervous anticipation over Federal Reserve chairman Paul Volcker's testimony to Congress gave way to relief when his comments contained few surprises.

On Wall Street the Dow Jones Industrial Average overcame an initial fall to record a modest gain in afternoon trading and an hour before the close the index was six points higher. The gain was trimmed to 2·54 at 1283·13 by the end of the day's trading.

Volume reached 188 million shares traded.

Although the trading pace was tepid, investors said the overall response to the Fed's targets was optimistic as investors believed the Fed's 1985 monetary policy guidelines were consistent with expectations for 4-5 p.c. real growth in the economy.

Mr Volcker's testimony was not so favourably received by bond market participants, however. Bond prices slumped sharply in response to comments by the Fed chairman that confirmed the central bank's switch to a less accommodative monetary policy stance last January in the face of rapid growth in the money supply gauges.

Exploration deal for Sudan gold

A GOLD exploration agreement between the Sudan and Egyptian financier Dr Ibrahim Kamel, head of the Arab mining investment group Dar Tadine Al Umma, was signed in Khartoum yesterday.

Under the terms of the contract the Sudan will receive 27·5 p.c. of the gold eventually produced, with the balance going to Dar Tadine Umma (DTU) which plans to commit £S 8·5 million to its exploration programme. The Arab group is required to spend £S2·5 million within the first two years, and has been granted exploration rights over two territories measuring 100,000 square kilometres.

Exploration work in the Sudan will be conducted by Goesurvey based in Nairobi and with offices in the United Kingdom.

NEW ISSUES — how to get them, how to profit with them

Did you know that there are literally thousands of investors in this country who make large, regular profits out of "stagging" and investing in exciting new issues year after year . . . and not just the highly publicised ones you read about in the papers? Many of them are private investors, some of them never buy any other sort of share and most of them are not particularly switched-on when it comes to stocks and shares . . . they are just better informed. And that really is the secret . . . being better informed about new issues is even more important than in most other forms of investment, even though all new issues do have an in-built advantage, one quite remarkable, in-built advantage! Find out what their advantage is, and how you can make more money out of this very specialised and exciting end of the stockmarket. Write TODAY for details of the New Issue Share Guide, a unique service that advises you which new issues to buy, to avoid and when definitely NOT to sell them—this is of paramount importance for some companies amongst the new issues really world beaters! P.S. You'll also get entirely free a copy of our booklet "New Issues—How to get them, how to profit with them."

MAKE SURE OF YOUR TAX RELIEF!

THE QUESTOR COLUMN

Trafalgar the big spender

A NEWFOUND enthusiasm for oil and gas was always bound to lead Trafalgar House into a massive spending spree, the bill for which has landed squarely on shareholders' doormats.

They should not, however, complain. They have not been tapped for cash for ten years, and so far the oil and gas ventures are paying off. Just to emphasise the point, it announced a major gas discovery in the southern North Sea yesterday.

At the end of 1983-84 Trafalgar had invested around £80 million in oil and gas, and the target is to put another £100 million in this year, of which 40 p.c. is destined for the United States.

But oil and gas is not the only area where Trafalgar is spending hard. In shipping it has just paid out £46 million for the Atlantic Convevor and its bids for Yarrow Shipbuilders and Haden will together mop up £70 million to £80 million, assuming they are successful.

Excluding the acquisitions of Yarrow and Haden, Trafalgar will be spending at least £200 million in the current year and, while the balance sheet is by no means up against the stops, debt has been rising quickly.

At the year-end net debt stood at £90 million. In the three months to the beginning of January the figure went up to £163 million despite the receipt of around £50 million from the sale of Plumtree Court, in the City.

Since January Trafalgar has had to pay for the Atlantic Convevor and also its final dividend, so net debt is currently probably more than £200 million, pushing gearing to around 60 p.c. of shareholders' funds.

It is fortunate for Trafalgar that a need to strengthen the balance sheet has coincided with a strong share price and a ready queue of buyers for any decent equity on offer. Underwriters yesterday took their quotas and came back for more.

The rights issue will be accomplished with virtually no dilution in earnings, and with the tax charge coming down fast as a result of careful balancing on oil and gas and tax losses in Scott Lithgow and R G C Offshore, full year earnings are likely to emerge at around 33p a share.

That puts the shares at 356p on a price-earnings ratio of under 11 times. They remain a firm buy.

Haden offer not so tasty

TRAFALGAR will not win many new friends, however, with its bid for Haden. The all cash offer, at this stage, does not even offer a tax deferring note, let alone an equity exchange.

The bidder's timing, however, cannot be faulted. Haden has just ruled off its accounts for the year to December 31, 1984, and they are not a pretty sight.

Pre-tax profits are likely to have fallen to about £3 million before tax, half the level of 1983 and little more than one third the profits achieved in 1982. At the 1984 interim stage, profits had drooped to £213,000 from £3 million in the 1983 first half.

That is not an especially exciting backdrop against which to mount a defence, but the stage is set for a strong recovery in the current year on the basis of record orders received.

Haden will no doubt concentrate on what it perceives to be the lack of commercial logic in the bid, but whether it will also be able to stretch to a current year profits forecast is questionable. Much depends on how long the bid runs.

But it will be able to point to the immense strength of the balance sheet and the management changes that have taken place as evidence that Trafalgar is trying it on with a cheeky opening shot.

That certainly is the market view. Haden shares have come up by 40 p.c. in the past month thanks to heavyweight buying from the Trafalgar camp, but even so they closed another 54p up at 288p last night, outstripping the 240p bid by 48p.

At that level, weak holders may well be tempted to sell in the market.

Waterford worth holding

EIRE is still in the grip of recession, but the booming American markets have played an increasingly important role in the fortunes of a number of Eire's bigger companies, like Jefferson Smurfit and Cement Roadstone.

While these have set up operations across the Atlantic, Waterford Glass, as a manufacturer of fine crystal and china, looks to the United States as an important customer.

A rising dollar enabled the company to peg its prices in 1983, with the result its fortunes began to improve. With the dollar continuing its upwards path in 1984, and Waterford having reorganised its distribution arrangements, the benefits have flowed through in the past year.

As a result, full-year pre-tax profits are up more than 40 p.c. from I£10·2 million to I£14·6 million. Waterford Crystal, with half its sales across the Atlantic, accounted for I£11 million, against I£7 million.

Better still, demand was such that sales, up 20 p.c. in volume terms, exceeded production, and the trend of rising inventories of previous years was reversed. The combined effect is borrowings cut to I£45·4 million and gearing down from 60 p.c. to 47 p.c., and expected to fall further.

Stoke-on-Trent based Aynsley China also continued to prosper with profits up a third to £2·4 million. Elsewhere, the Switzer department stores returned profits only marginally lower despite a downturn in consumer spending and high VAT rates.

The decline in the motor market, hit the Smith group subsidiary, which lost I£750,000 against I£800,000. It has ceased to assemble Renault cars, but continues as a distributor, and redundancies and rationalisation costs here account for more than half the I£2 million of extraordinary charges below the line.

With a high level of demand for its mainstream products, and currency movements continuing to contribute to the strength of its markets in the United States, an improvement to I£17·5 million looks possible in 1985 — providing the dollar holds its present level.

The shares up 2½ to 48p yesterday, have risen more than 75 p.c. in the past year, a third of that in the past month, and sell at 8·6 times historic earnings. Worth staying with—but keep one eye on the dollar.

THE pound lost half a cent, falling from $1·0925 to $1·0875 as the American currency raced ahead following the testimony to Congress of Federal Reserve Board chairman, Paul Volcker.

Other currencies were also hard hit. The pound held steady in terms of Continentals but the impact of the dollar reduced its average international value from 71·6 to 71·4.

In London money markets, a slight easing of money costs was reversed later in the day as the pound's early strength faded in the afternoon.

Distribution Sales Professionals — Computer Industry

West Midlands and Thames Valley areas, package c.£27,000 + car

These are exceptional opportunities to join one of the most successful and fastest growing computer systems manufacturers in Europe. There are openings in both locations for either established computer sales professionals, or people wishing to break into this challenging environment, to play vital roles in generating new business and further developing existing accounts. Aged 25-40, you should have a proven record in computer/high-tech sales or, alternatively, a background in the distribution or retail sectors and possess the commercial acumen and motivation to succeed in the computer industry. The product range, training facilities, sales support, working environment, incentives and career prospects are genuinely excellent.

Operations Director — Retailing

Worldwide Shipboard Concessions
Southampton, £25,000 + car + excellent incentive bonus

Ocean Trading, a £ multi-million t/o subsidiary of Hanson Trust, is an international market leader in the concessionary operation of tax and duty-free shops on cruise ships and ferries. Reporting to the Managing Director, the successful candidate will be responsible for achieving the profit objectives of several widely dispersed units, controlling around 250 employees and maintaining the highest professional sales and merchandising standards. Applicants, in their 30's, will have successfully managed a number of outlets within a prestigious retail organisation. This board appointment requires a down-to-earth and personable executive with a high level of commercial intelligence, drive and willingness to travel extensively. Additionally there may be a requirement to be based overseas at a later date. Prospects within the company and group are first class and the generous benefit package includes comprehensive relocation expenses.

Managing Director — German Speaking

Autonomous U.K. Division of a Major Group
Leeds, c.£24,000 + bonus + prestige car

This is an excellent opportunity to be totally responsible for the U.K. Marketing and Distribution operation of this successful International market leader engaged in fast moving consumer durable products. Totally profit responsible, the Managing Director will have a brief to ensure continued growth and to realise the group's plans to have a substantial U.K. company. Aged 35-45, you should be of graduate level with a classic marketing, sales and general management background, probably in consumer durables, but, more importantly, flair and understanding of the broader demands of general management are essential, as is a working knowledge of German. The benefits include relocation and incentive bonuses, and the prospects within this £ multi-million group are excellent.

Engineer new concepts

in domestic appliances

At Hoover, we're proud of the quality, the reliability and the technical excellence that have earned us a remarkable reputation. It should come as no surprise, then, to discover that we set great store by our research and development programme. And never more so than in these times of rapid technological advance, which is why we are yet again expanding these activities – resulting in more opportunities in basic and applied research, and electronics engineering.

Research Engineers and Scientists

We would like to hear from graduates in physics, electronics, mechanical/electrical engineering and related disciplines who have already gained experience in an industrial research environment. You would work as a member of a dedicated team conducting research and following up developments in technology and science with the aim of improving and expanding our product range.

Electronics Engineer

This position will attract a graduate Electronics Engineer who has design experience in hardware and software for microprocessor and other electronic control systems. It involves the development of new electronic control systems for domestic appliances. Main tasks will centre around the application of microprocessors even further into our products by interfacing microprocessor control systems with power devices to take a new conceptual approach to motor speed control.

Whatever your discipline, in return for your flair for innovation, your critical yet practical approach and your interest in playing a key role in the development of our future, you can expect excellent rewards — a highly competitive salary, attractive benefits and top prospects for your future.

The positions are located at our Perivale, West London site and generous assistance will be given with relocation where appropriate.

To apply, or for further information, please contact Mr. I. G. McKellar, Personnel Manager HQ and Field, Hoover plc, 20 Wadsworth Road, Perivale, Greenford, Middlesex, UB6 8DX. Telephone 01-997 3311.

Attractive starting salaries will reflect depth of relevant experience. Benefits are those associated with a company of Ferranti's standing and reputation, including generous relocation assistance, where appropriate.

Please write, in the first instance, with a detailed C.V., quoting reference 329/156, to Colin Roberts, Ferranti Computer Systems Limited, Bird Hall Lane, Cheadle Heath, Stockport SK3 0XQ.

Project Engineers and Instrument Engineers

... for interesting and challenging worldwide projects — BASED: WEST LONDON

Glaxo Pharmaceuticals Limited — Glaxo

The Glaxo Group is one of the world's leading health-care companies with worldwide sales in excess of £1 billion. Glaxo Production & Engineering Services Limited, a subsidiary company, plays a key role in the Group's active capital investment programme, both at home and overseas.

Our highly professional team of Engineers provides specialist advice and assistance on the engineering design, construction and project management of capital work, primarily in the pharmaceutical formulation and research laboratory areas. Recent projects have included new factories for pharmaceutical production in the USA and Africa and new research buildings in the UK, as well as multi-million pound expansions in several countries. We currently have stimulating career opportunities for:

Project Engineers — £17.5-£20K (inc.)

You will be engaged upon capital projects, new production and laboratory building projects and updating of existing buildings for pharmaceutical production and research.

Preferably aged 35-45, you will be a Chartered Engineer with experience of large-scale project work in pharmaceutical manufacturing. The ability to control the work of in-house and exterior design teams and to monitor and control the work of contracting organisations in the construction of heavily serviced and complex buildings is essential.

Instrument Engineers — c.£15K (inc.)

You will provide a measurement and control service to project teams at home and abroad as well as acting as project engineer on control orientated projects.

Preferably aged 26+, you should have Chartered status, or educational qualifications and experience leading directly to it. An inventive approach to problem solving in process control, building management or machine control applications, probably gained with an end-user organisation, is essential.

Based at Greenford, these posts will offer opportunities to travel and occasionally to temporarily relocate, both within the UK and overseas. Essential qualities include a mature attitude, self motivation and the ability to work as friendly colleagues with people at all levels in the organisation and of many nationalities.

In addition to a competitive salary in the range quoted, the attractive benefits package includes non-contributory pension scheme and relocation assistance, where appropriate.

Please write or telephone for an application form to Miss V. A. Waters, Site Personnel Manager, Glaxo Pharmaceuticals Limited, Greenford Road, Greenford, Middlesex (Tel: 01-422 3434, ext. 3024), quoting ref. D.789.

Property & Infrastructure Management

High-growth, high tech, high potential c.£16,000 + car

WANG
The Office Automation Computer People.

Wang's massive success in the marketplace has powered our physical presence in the UK to a total of over 1000 employees, 30 buildings, and 300,000 square feet of offices, distribution and light industrial space.
Our headquarters and regional premises, developed as outstanding examples of Wang's unique automation and integration philosophy, are packed with high-technology equipment, systems and facilities with strong emphasis on total environmental control.
The management of this fast-expanding property network presents a qualified mechanical or electrical engineer, who has around 10 years' experience in property services management, with an impressive portfolio of opportunities.
As our General Services Manager you will need to be an excellent man-manager capable of effectively prioritising and delegating functions such as repairs, maintenance and cleaning, energy management, computer installation and calling, security and catering. Equally you will need to be an inspired, and inspiring, project manager who can successfully orchestrate all the components of, say, a relocation or office opening. Probably aged around 30, you will have worked in the computing or similar industries coping with the pressures of dynamic growth.
Salary is negotiable around £16,000 depending on experience, and a Cavalier car is provided in view of the considerable travelling required from the Isleworth base. There is also a very valuable package of benefits including private health, pension, life assurance and stock purchase schemes.
Please write with full career details to Clare Taylor, Wang (UK) Limited, Wang House, 661 London Road, Isleworth, Middlesex TW7 4EH. Or telephone 01-847 1954 (24-hour answering service) for an application form.

Distribution Manager

FMCG 28-40 Manchester to £16,000 + car

This is a key role where a young energetic professional can directly influence the commercial and market success of a well-established company committed to changing its systems of distribution in extremely competitive market conditions. The company, which has a sound profit performance, makes and sells a range of branded consumer products throughout the UK market.
Your responsibilities will encompass everything from the time the product arrives in the warehouse until it is with the thousands of retail outlets which form the customer base.
Your success, therefore, will be measured against your ability to satisfy customer requirements consistent with acceptable distribution costs.
To be a candidate, you must have relevant distribution management experience in an organisation respected for its professionalism. This would include responsibility for own and contract transport as well as warehousing and you should hold the Certificate of Professional Competence necessary for an Operator's Licence.

Please send full career details, including current salary, or apply for an application form to Tim Harney, Ref: W97/9155/DT, PA Personnel Services, 73-79 King Street, Manchester M2 2JL. Tel: 061-236 4531.

Food Technologist

HP
HP Foods Limited

At HP Foods we market some of the best known established quality products in the food industry — including HP, Daddies and Epicure. But we're not standing still — we have a turnover approaching £70 million and a progressive programme of product development and improvement.
We now need an experienced and enthusiastic Food Technologist who will relish the chance to join our small, highly professional technical services team at our Head Office.
Reporting to the Company Technical Manager you will provide extensive support in the exciting, critical areas of new product development and extensions to existing product ranges. You will contribute your own creative ideas and research to the evaluation of alternative ingredients and packaging.
An innovative, self-starter you will be aged 25+ with at least a HNC/HND in food technology. Experience in the food industry is essential, in addition a working knowledge of the sauces, canning, pickling or preservatives industry and product development together with experience in the field of home economics would be a distinct advantage.
An attractive salary will be offered and relocation assistance will be provided where appropriate.

Please send a written application and cv, or telephone for an application form to: Peter Harwood, Resourcing and Development Manager, HP Foods Limited, Edinburgh House, Abbey Street, Market Harborough, Leicestershire LE16 9BG. Tel: 0858 64771.

Production Engineers

Senior roles in a high-tech environment

STC
Innovative leaders in PCB manufacture
STC EXACTA LTD

STC Exacta Limited, one of Europe's leading manufacturers of Printed Circuit Boards, is growing fast. We have just officially opened the latest expansion to our manufacturing facilities at Selkirk, in Scotland's attractive Border Country.
As a result of this development, we are looking for a number of Production Engineers to take senior roles with responsibility for clearly defined areas of the production activity.
Your responsibilities will cover the whole range of production engineering. Initially you will be involved in the technical assessment of the process, thorough identification and evaluation of equipment and systems, their development for production and final installation — prior to handover to line management.
Overall, your brief will be to ensure that the most cost-effective manufacturing methods are utilised while maintaining safety and quality standards.
To meet the requirements of these very interesting and responsible posts, you should be aged 28+, educated to BSc or HND level in an engineering discipline and have 5 years' production/industrial engineering experience in a progressive manufacturing environment. Any knowledge of test or software engineering would be especially valuable.
In terms of remuneration, a comprehensive package will be offered which will include a negotiable salary dependent upon experience, pension and life assurance cover, and comprehensive relocation assistance. Also significant, of course, are the long-term career development opportunities available both with STC Exacta or our international parent group.
Find out more now by writing with brief but comprehensive career and personal details to: Penny Hardie, Personnel Administration Manager, STC Exacta Limited, Selkirk, Scotland TD7 5EJ.

Field Sales Manager

Highly-innovative watch product range based N Home Counties package c.£30,000 + car + superb benefits

This highly successful privately-owned, medium-sized company has achieved dominant leadership in the acutely price-sensitive 'popular sector' of the watch marketplace.
It has achieved a number of "firsts": • It trail-blazed the introduction of watches, sold in large volume through supermarkets. • It was also the first organisation to apply the flair and innovation normally associated with the FMCG sector to the selling and marketing of watches.
Its branded and own-label product range is sold aggressively by the company's highly-motivated sales team, on the basis of price, quality, fashion and technical merit, into a wide range of outlets including: mail-order houses, high-street multiples, and cash and carries.
Now, with a period of substantial growth forecast for the watch trade — largely resulting from the enormous technological and cosmetic advances that are presently being made — the company is poised for a phase of accelerated growth.
To spearhead its sales activity, a Field Sales Manager is sought to lead and motivate the four-strong UK-wide sales team, while at the same time managing and developing his or her own major accounts.
This vital appointment will particularly appeal to those, aged 30-55, who have successfully led a sales team operating within the FMCG or fast-moving durable sectors and who are motivated by the prospect of an excellent basic salary and high commission earnings.
To apply, please send cv or telephone or write for an application form to James Gunn, Ref: SS63/0356/DT, PA Sales Selection, Hyde Park House, 60a Knightsbridge, London SW1X 7LE. Tel: 01-235 6060 ext 289

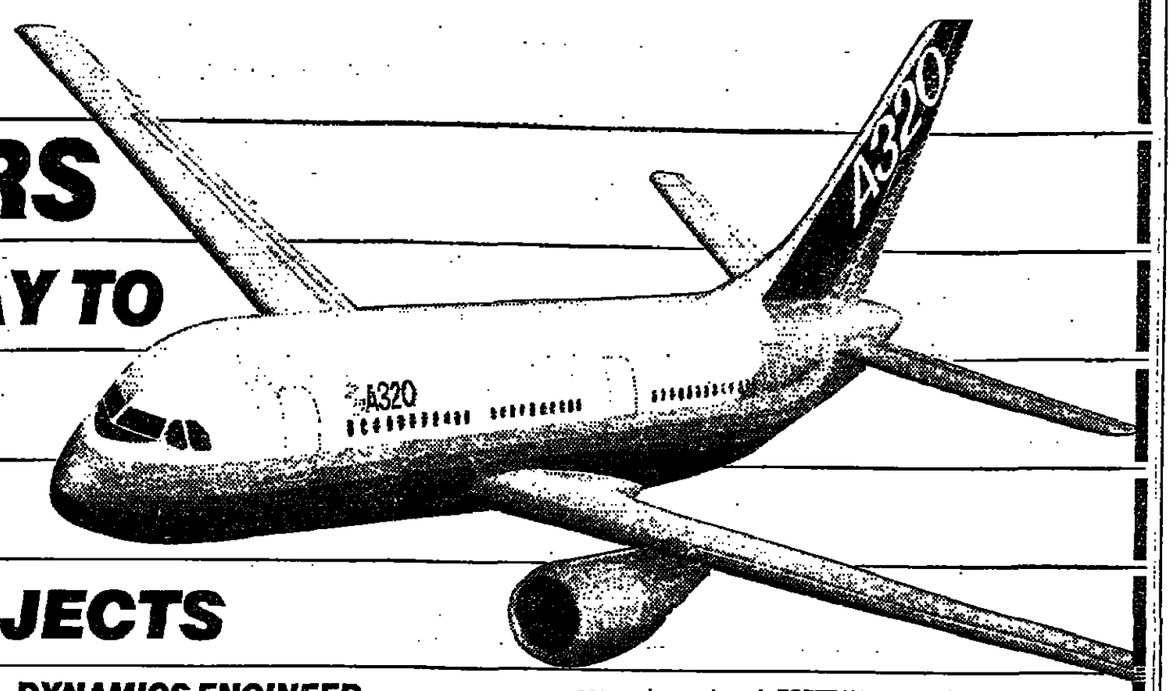
DESIGN ENGINEERS WING YOUR WAY TO BRISTOL FOR EXCITING AIRCRAFT PROJECTS



Without any doubt, some of the most exciting projects in aircraft design are happening right here at British Aerospace Aircraft Group at Filton, Bristol.

With design programmes like that, and our recent establishment as the UK Management Centre for the multi-national airbus project, we are in a better position than ever to offer outstanding careers to design engineering professionals.

We currently have a number of opportunities available, not just to work on the A320, but also on the BAe 146 and other major aircraft.

SYSTEMS ENGINEERS

Qualified Mechanical or Aeronautical Engineers, preferably with at least three years' experience in electro-mechanical, fluid or general mechanical systems. The successful applicants will assist in producing technical definitions of the fuel systems for the A320 jetliner. This will include overall system definition in terms of fuel load, refuelling, aircraft balance, heat sink etc. design of tanks, engine feed system and fuel gauging, and the definition and selection of essential equipment.

AVIONICS ENGINEERS

Qualified Avionics Engineers ideally with several years' experience are required in the following areas of aircraft design: Flight Dynamics, Digital Avionics, Real-time Software Engineering, Dynamic Modelling Techniques.

Applications are invited from engineers with a good theoretical and practical background, willing to expand into these areas, where the work will include testing and interface with equipment vendors.

DYNAMICS ENGINEER

STRESS, STRUCTURES AND LOADS ENGINEERS

Qualified to degree standard or equivalent, and with some years' experience, for multi-disciplinary Structures Department, where advanced techniques and computer-aided design aids are in everyday use. It is essential to have experience in at least one of the following areas: Stressing, Structural Analysis, Fatigue, Fail-safe, Static Strength, Stiffness, and Loads.

STRUCTURAL, FURNISHING AND SYSTEMS INSTALLATION DESIGNERS

You must have served an engineering apprenticeship and have several years' experience of aircraft structures, furnishing or systems installations design, to work in a multi-discipline Design Office. Applicants should be capable of seeing designs through from scheme stage to finished product. The Design Office has a growing CAD capability and applicants with an interest in the field will be given full opportunities.

SYSTEMS PROGRAMMERS AND SOFTWARE DEVELOPMENT

Qualified to degree or equivalent in Engineering and/or Mathematics with computing subjects. Successful candidates will work on Technical Office application programmes, including data base systems. Applicants should have at least one year's experience in FORTRAN programming and some familiarity with PDP RSX11 or VAX VMS systems would be an advantage.

We also have opportunities in other areas within the Design Engineering function, in particular:

DESIGN PROJECT ENGINEER
STANDARDS ENGINEER

In the majority of cases, our Design Engineers can look forward to occasional foreign travel to liaise with Airbus partners in France, Germany, Spain and Belgium.

You'll also benefit from an attractive salary, a first-class contributory pension scheme, sick pay and life assurance schemes and excellent welfare, social and sports facilities.

Filton is on the northern outskirts of the thriving City of Bristol, with its excellent road and rail communications which allow easy access to both the surrounding countryside and London, the Midlands, Wales and the West. Generous relocation expenses will be paid in appropriate cases.

For an application form please telephone or write to Employment Manager, (Ref AIR/7), British Aerospace, Aircraft Group, Filton House, Bristol BS99 7AR. Tel. Bristol (0272) 693831 Ext. 4395.

Two key opportunities in Manufacturing Management

Chesebrough Pond's are seeking two highly capable men or women to take responsibility for these challenging appointments.

Industrial Engineer

With an Industrial Engineering qualification and an FMCG background, you'll be skilled in the presentation of proposals and their implementation through to completion. This experience, together with familiarity with the latest techniques and, ideally, MTM knowledge, will enable you to handle the following duties.

Setting line standards; initiating cost reductions and improvements in the manufacturing operation; identifying equipment needs; preparing and implementing capital projects; providing costings/estimates.

Production Engineering Manager

Working closely with production management, machine manufacturers and agents, you'll be responsible for the efficiency of both staff and equipment in the Production Departments. This will include machine maintenance; staff training and direction; evaluation of problems and the implementation of improvements; identification of equipment needs; establishment and control of departmental budgets.

To cope, you'll need a minimum of HNC in Mechanical Engineering, 3-5 years' production equipment and man-management experience, plus sound technical ability. Familiarity of modern electronic controls would be an advantage, as would a computer background.

In either case, you can look forward to excellent prospects and the kind of salary/benefits package expected of a major international organisation.

Please telephone or write for an application form to: Jean McCoy, Personnel Manager, Chesebrough Pond's Limited, Victoria Road, London NW10 6NA. Tel: 01-965 6575.

Production and Materials Planning Controller

Precision Casting — Rural South Cheshire

PCD Vickers manufacture precision castings to be used in products powering some of the world's most advanced aircraft, as well as those vital in the nuclear and medical fields.

Reporting to the Foundry Production Control Manager, your major tasks will be to co-ordinate order book and scheduling requirements, establishing and evaluating capacity and production levels against the operating plan to reach financial output targets. You'll liaise with management in monitoring production performance, covering all aspects of manning, plant and sub-contract assistance. Involvement with our computer based production planning and control system (KRP) will also fall within your sphere of operations.

You'll be educated to 'A' level standard, supplemented, ideally, by an Engineering or Commercial apprenticeship. Your formal training in Production/Materials Control should be reinforced by 5 years' relevant experience in a manufacturing industry operating with computerised systems. Well-developed communication and man-management skills should be supplemented by an understanding of a basic computer language.

The remuneration package includes an attractive salary, preferential car purchase scheme, together with 33 days' holiday, a 4½ day working week and comprehensive sports and social facilities. A comprehensive relocation package is available where appropriate.

Ferranti Electronics Ltd.

FIELD SALES ENGINEERS

What do these products have in common...

Ferranti Electronics is the U.K.'s leading semi conductor manufacturer with an exceptional growth record, both in this country and overseas. Our products are among the most advanced in the field, and are used in a wide variety of applications ranging from the Rapier missile to the Sinclair electric vehicle.

We're now seeking a number of Field Sales Engineers to advance sales of our exciting range of standard and custom-built semi conductors, including the Ferranti U.L.A. Your brief will be to optimise sales with established clients and develop new opportunities within your territory. This will involve you in: negotiations on both specification and price and the introduction of exciting new products and concepts. In some cases, you may directly influence the direction of end equipment development.

What type of experience will you need? You will be over 25 and preferably educated to degree level or equivalent. At the moment you could be working in a number of areas: as a Field Sales Engineer in the semiconductor industry; as a Development Engineer in electronics; as a Distribution Sales Engineer; or as an OEM Salesman wishing to move into the semiconductor field.

Appropriate training will be given as required. In addition you'll need well-developed business flair, excellent interpersonal skills and the commitment to become really involved.

In return you can expect an excellent basic salary plus bonus, a 2 litre car and a broad range of other benefits that really are second to none. A generous relocation package will be provided where appropriate.

Do you want to use your talents in this rapidly developing and exciting field; and work for the country's leading semiconductor manufacturer? If so, write with full details of career to date to: John Malam, Ferranti Electronics, Fields New Road, Chadderton, Oldham OL9 8NP. or call Nigel Bailey on 061-624 0515 (office hours) or 061-633 9132 (evenings and weekends).

We are an equal opportunity employer.

BRITISH APPROVALS BOARD FOR TELECOMMUNICATIONS

SENIOR TELECOMMUNICATIONS ENGINEERS

Since the appointment made in 1982 by the Secretary of State for Trade & Industry, B.A.B.T. has been actively involved in the approval of subscriber apparatus for connection to B.T. networks. The Board is now seeking to recruit two Senior Engineers to work in the following areas:

Manufacturers Delegated Testing — this appointment requires extensive knowledge of subscriber equipment (PABX, Telex, Telephones, etc.), and ideally previous experience of laboratory testing of such equipment.

Approval Scheme for Subscriber Equipment— this appointment requires a knowledge of subscriber equipment (Telex, Telephones, Modems, etc.), together with a comprehensive knowledge of the PSTN interface.

All candidates must be Chartered or University Graduate Engineers with a proven ability to communicate effectively at all levels. Previous experience gained with either B.T. or with a major British telecommunications manufacturer would be a distinct advantage.

The successful applicant for the first post will be provided with a company car and will be required to travel daily in the U.K. to visit participating manufacturers' test laboratories. The post may be based at the Board's headquarters in Walton-on-Thames, Surrey, or may be based at the applicant's home, in which case regular liaison visits will be made to the Board.

The second post will be based at the Board's headquarters and will involve some travel in the U.K. and occasionally abroad.

The remuneration package for both posts includes an attractive and negotiable salary with a full range of benefits.

Suitably qualified individuals interested in the appointments should write as soon as possible to The Director Mr. J. Vevers, O.B.E., C.ENG., at Mark House 9-11 Queens Road, Hersham, Walton-on-Thames, Surrey KT12 5NA. Telephone: Walton-on-Thames 244401, giving details of their qualifications, experience and present salary together with an indication of salary required.

INDIA EASILY DISPOSE OF PAKISTAN

By MICHAEL CAREY in Melbourne

INDIA, though at one stage reduced to 27 for three by Imran Khan, completed a highly efficient all-round performance by defeating Pakistan by six wickets with 25 balls to spare in their opening match in the World Cricket Championship under the Melbourne lights last night.

It was a reminder to the other sides in Group A, England and Australia, that the grasp of the limited overs game that enabled India to win the World Cup two years ago has not entirely deserted them, despite their recent stumbling displays against England.

The match also provided further proof, if any were needed, of the precocious batting skills of Mohammed Azharuddin, who maintained his remarkable run of big scores with an unbeaten 95, made from 138 balls and begun when the menace of Imran was at its greatest.

The rest of Pakistan's attack, however, came into the less-than-potent category and once Miandad had taken the difficult decision to remove Imran after six overs, Azharuddin and Gavaskar as good as won the match by adding 152 in the next 32 overs.

Azharuddin, when 37, was comfortably dropped at the wicket by Dalpat off Naqqash in the 19th over, but otherwise he and his captain scarcely hinted at an error as they nudged and steered the bowling around, which was all that was required, after Pakistan had been dismissed for 183.

Pedestrian play

Only Imran's bowling, his first at this level for a year or so, lifted a somewhat pedestrian performance by Pakistan.

Though Qasim Omar accumulated a steady 57 after being dropped in Binny's first over, none of their main stroke-players was able to produce the lengthy fluent innings required.

Length and line, those qualities currently sought by England, were much in evidence, not only from the quicker bowlers but especially from Shashtri, while Sivaramakrishnan, giving the ball plenty of air, played his part by taking two early wickets as Pakistan tried to accelerate.

Imran then extracted more bounce than anyone, and in his first over produced a real snorter of a delivery which lifted to have Shastri caught at slip.

Srikkanth, trying to force a ball which was probably too straight for the purpose and which also bounced, fell to another slip catch, and Vengsarkar, not a batsman many would back in these circumstances, appeared to misread the length of his first ball and was superbly caught in the gully by the diving Mudassar.

No one else hustled the batsmen like Imran, and though he had probably started to tire, there was much discussion between Miandad and his aides before he was taken off.

The white ball, though used for only 25 overs at each end, tends to lose its hardness very quickly, and when Imran came back later, with India needing only 77 from 21 overs, he was played much more comfortably.

By then, Azharuddin was whipping the ball away square on both sides of the wicket, and, tempering his strokes to the needs of his side, hit only one four in his half-century, while Gavaskar played an ideal supporting role before he was low

Chris Cowdrey . . . the pain has eased considerably.

Cowdrey delays second x-ray

ENGLAND, who are fielding their only 11 fit players against a Victorian Second XI in Bendigo today—and borrowing a 12th man from their opponents—are still uncertain about the seriousness of the injury to all-rounder Chris Cowdrey, writes Michael Carey.

Cowdrey, struck on his left wrist in the game at Ballarat had an X-ray which originally diagnosed bruising, but he felt that the injury was more serious, and that a second X-ray would be necessary.

This was not taken yesterday, however, when Cowdrey reported to the England manager Tony Brown that the injury appeared to have eased.

'Time on our side'

Mr Brown said: "We have time on our side before our next match, and Chris is still in some pain, so if he feels another X-ray might reveal the wrist is broken, we will arrange to have it in the next day or two."

SILENCE ON TOUR THREAT

THE threat by politicians to disrupt England's planned tour to the West Indies next winter is not on the agenda for this week's informal meeting of International Cricket Conference delegates in Melbourne.

The tour has looked in jeopardy since England's under-19's were refused entry recently to three West Indian countries — Guyana, Trinidad and Antigua.

The politicians objected to the South African links of three of the youngesters and are unlikely to look more favourably on a full England side which could contain players previously banned for visiting South Africa.

It had been expected that the ICC delegates would use their appearances at the World Championship of Cricket in Melbourne to try to sort out the matter.

But ICC secretary Jack Bailey said yesterday: "The item is not on the agenda. We are merely meeting because we are all in one place at the same time. But in any case the meeting is only informal and no decisions can be taken."

Mr Bailey said the delegates would be discussing ideas for the 1987 World Cup which is due to be held jointly between India and Pakistan.

SMITH SET FOR 'A LOT OF RUNS'

CHRIS SMITH, England's forgotten batsman, is enjoying his first break from cricket in six years and reflecting on what might have been as his former colleagues celebrated their Test triumph in India and moved on to Australia for the World Championship of Cricket.

This time last year the South African-born opener was very much a part of the England set-up. Having played twice in the 1983 home series against New Zealand, he went on the winter tour of New Zealand and Pakistan and easily outscored the other two openers, Graeme Fowler and Chris Tavare.

But then, having averaged 35 in his seven Tests, Smith was discarded. Nothing has been heard of him since on the international scene.

"No, I'm not bitter about what's happened, though I do sometimes wonder why I wasn't given at least a chance against the West Indies last summer," says Hampshire's man from Durban.

Long hours

"I would dearly love to play for England again, but I know it won't be easy. After all, a lot of fellows have now moved ahead of me in the queue."

Smith, 26, has an insatiable appetite for batting long hours, but last summer, when he scored a moderate 1,300 runs, the demands of playing all-the-year-round for six years finally caught up with him.

"I was stale and no longer enjoying my cricket with Hampshire," he explains. "I had played 12 consecutive seasons and for an opening batsman who was always ducking and diving against quick bowlers that means a tremendous amount of mental pressure. It became too much for me."

This winter, therefore, he has turned his back on domestic cricket in South Africa and stayed in England to emerge as something of a super salesman.

Plenty to offer

Working for himself — "Chris Smith Promotions" — this personable and articulate individual is busily marketing Hampshire County Cricket Club with startling success.

Already he has brought in £65,000 extra business, selling advertising boards and the use of executive boxes, marquees and tents to 75 companies not previously linked with the county club.

"I'm enjoying myself at something I seem to be quite good at and, at the same time, recharging my batteries for cricket," he smiles. "I just know I'm going to score a lot of runs next season and show people I still have plenty to offer."

MORE RUNS FOR BROAD

CHRIS BROAD, the in-form Test batsman, helped the touring English Counties XI beat a Zimbabwe "B" side at Kwekwe yesterday.

He continued his excellent run of scores with 78, though he was dropped before he had scored and fellow-opener Andy Lloyd was dismissed for a duck.

Assisted by Mark Nicholls (37) and Paul Terry (34), the Counties made 214 for five off 50 overs.

Zimbabwe "B" never looked like reaching the target and were dismissed in the 48th over for 177.

Counties XI: 214-5 (C. Broad 78, M. Nicholls 37, P. Terry 34, R. Williams 34 not out). Zimbabwe "B": 177 (F. Brandes 42, T. Tremlett 3-32, F. Newman 2-20, R. Williams 2-43).

Women's Bowls

Jersey surprise favourites

By A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT in Melbourne

JERSEY caused a major upset by beating the strong Australian triples team 21-11 in the 17th round of the women's world bowls championships at Melbourne yesterday.

Earlier in the day the Channel Islanders were surprisingly beaten 18-15 in the pairs and 16-15 in the triples by Argentina who had previously won only one game in the pairs and had not opened their account in the triples.

Meanwhile, Australia scored a comfortable 21-14 triples win over Hongkong to dash away to a two-game lead after 16 rounds.

Jersey's Barbara Le Moignan, Kath Hickman, Doreen Gay, who had previously won only four games, never let the Australians into the game after breaking away 20-6 at the 15th.

England wins

Margaret Blattman and Jean Lowery, also of Jersey, worried the Australian pair in their match and won handsomely 18-12, but the Australian pair already have the gold medal in their grasp, with two rounds still to be played, because of their good percentage.

Australia's loss to Jersey in the triples left them one game clear of Hongkong with Wales half a game away, followed by England and New Zealand who trail by the same margin.

England's pairs and triples had big wins over the United States. Norma Shaw and Jean Valls won their match 28-10 and their triples line-up of Brenda Atherton, Betty Stubbings and Mavis Steele won 32-9. England had an afternoon bye in both events.

Wales won the triples at Worthing in 1977 and yesterday Rita Jones, Mair Jones and Linda Parker won 21-18 from Zimbabwe, then lost 11-21 to Scotland, but they are still in contention for a minor medal.

Maria Lum On and Willow Fiji lifted Fiji's hopes for their second minor medal in women's world bowls when they beat Canada 35-17 in their morning game and ended the day with a 35-11 win over Israel. Fiji meet Hongkong tomorrow and follow with a game in the 19th round.

THAW INCENTIVE FOR BALDING'S AMBITIOUS PLAN

By HOTSPUR

IMPROVED prospects for a resumption of racing in Britain by the weekend have stiffened the resolve of Ian Balding, who has set himself a target of losing 10lb in the next 48 hours.

The Royal trainer is temporarily diverting his attention from preparing for the new Flat season to saddle three-quarters of his jumping string on Saturday, when he plans to ride in a point-to-point at Tweseldown before watching his two runners at Kempton Park.

A slight thaw has prompted Kempton to arrange a 3 p.m. inspection today to assess prospects for tomorrow' card, with Michael Webster, clerk of the course, expressing himself "slightly more optimistic" after yesterday's assessment.

Southwell, where tomorrow's other meeting is due to take place, report a great improvement in conditions and no inspection is planned.

Prospects for Saturday's Doncaster fixture have brightened with the disappearance of snow from the track, but a combination of snew and frost puts the card at Stratford-on-Avon in serious doubt and there will be a 10 a.m. inspection today.

Balding's representatives at Kempton on Saturday are Penny Bank, whom the trainer hopes will justify a tilt at the Cheltenham Festival with a prominent show in the Portlane Handicap 'Chase, and newcomer Ivor Anthony in the Bourne Leisure Group N H Flat Race.

'Improved a lot'

Both are owned by Mr Paul Mellon, who has named Ivor Anthony after his famous prewar trainer. Ivor Anthony, a four-year-old by Sir Ivor out of a Nijinsky mare, will be among the best-bred horses racing under Jumping Rules.

"He's marvellously bred but is a big, backward baby," said Balding, who plans to give him one run on the Flat and two over hurdles this season. "He's improved a lot recently and he'll be even better next season."

Penny Bank disappointed Balding at Cheltenham after a promising seasonal debut at Chepstow but the trainer believes that race was "not quite right" and expects a better showing next time. "He's in the Mildmay of Flete at Cheltenham but he's got to win before then to justify running there," he said.

The fourth member of Balding's jumping team is the stayer Cheka, who will have a run over hurdles in preparation for an outing on the second day of the Flat season in the Doncaster Town Plate, in which he was successful three years ago and second in 1983.

In the meantime, Balding has excess weight to shed in order to ride Ross Poldark in an Open race at the Army point-to-point. The 14-year-old had tendon trouble last year and has not run since finishing fourth in the 1983 Foxhunters' at Aintree.

John Francome's prospects of riding John Jenkins' Wing And A Prayer, favourite for the Daily Express Triumph Hurdle, have improved by 50 per cent. Fred Winter, Francome's retaining trainer, has withdrawn Tamino, to leave Gambler's Cup as his sole candidate.

Derryvale withdrawn

Most significant absentee among 18 withdrawals at yesterday's first acceptance stage was Irish-trained Derryvale, a 25-1 chance in ante-post betting. Reg Hollinshead has taken Out of the Gloom out of the Champion Hurdle to concentrate on the Triumph.

Charlie Nelson's Fan Club, ridden by Richard Hills, did best of the British runners at Cagnes-sur-Mer yesterday, finishing third over a mile. The card was the first in a 20-meeting package deal sealed yesterday between Extel and the French Jockey Club for transmission to British betting shops

Original negotiations centred on 35 meetings during the year, but members of the Betting Office Licensees Association were among those with reservations about the idea.

John Worrall, secretary of B O L A, said yesterday: "The French wanted to project their racing but were asking £1,650 per meeting. We thought this was too expensive, and were not keen on taking a service which would get in the way of racing in this country.

"We are in favour of this arrangement on a trial basis, with the French charging £1,000 per meeting.

HANSEL RAG TO ATONE

By Our Irish Correspondent

HANSEL RAG, among 31 first acceptors for next month's Champion Hurdle, is fancied to take today's W. T. O'Grady Memorial Hurdle (2.30) at Thurles.

The five-year-old, impressive winner of the Sweeps Hurdle at Leopardstown last month, can make amends for his disappointing run when fourth behind Red Oyster at Naas last time.

Regal Pleasure, Mick O'Toole's leading Cheltenham contender, may take the P. Z. Mower 'Chase (3.0), and Eliogarty, who is on course for the Christies Foxhunters' 'Chase, is expected to prove best in the Sportsman's Hunters' 'Chase (5.0).

'Pleasure' fancied

Regal Pleasure won at Naas last time and can complete a double before attempting to win the National Hunt 'Chase at Cheltenham.

Bregawn, the Gold Cup winner in 1983, and a possible this year, and Rainbow Warrior, entered for both the Gold Cup and Ritz Club Handicap 'Chase, appear Regal Pleasure's chief challengers.

Eliogarty will strip fit following a recent point-to-point success and may have too much speed for the 15-year-old Under Way, who is going for his 50th win.

Fredcoteri spoils Ararun record

By TONY STAFFORD

ARARUN lost his unbeaten record over jumps and caused his trainer, Paddy Mullins, food for thought when just failing to make all the running in the Wessel Cable Champion Hurdle at Leopardstown yesterday.

For much of the two miles, run on astonishingly good ground and in spring-like conditions, Ararun resembled a worthy successor to his stable-companion Dawn Run.

Jumping boldly and fluently for trainer's son Tony Mullins, Ararun went into a four-length lead over Bajan Sunshine at halfway. But whereas the stable's brilliant mare would probably have capitalised on that advantage, Ararun could not.

Coming to the penultimate hurdle, the entire field closed to within five lengths, and in the dash for home, the leader found the greater experience of course specialist Fredcoteri too much for him.

Tony Mullins gave Ararun full encouragement to challenge again on the run-in, but Fredcoteri, twice winner of the Sweeps Hurdle on this track, never looked likely to relinquish his advantage and won by one and a half lengths.

Trainer Arthur Moore immediately announced that the Champion Hurdle, in which Fredcoteri finished fifth last year, would again be his Cheltenham target.

'Triumph' probables

Ladbrokes make him a 16-1 chance. "Connections have backed the horse with us at much longer odds," said the firm's course representative Mike Dillon.

Paddy Mullins will wait a few days before committing Ararun to the Champion Hurdle. He may decide that the Waterford Crystal Supreme Novices' Hurdle on the same day would be a more comfortable objective than a tussle with Browne's Gazette and Gaye Brief.

Bajan Sunshine is another with two Cheltenham options. "We may go for the three-mile stayers' race rather than the Champion," said his owner Paul Green. "I don't think we'd fancy beating both Browne's Gazette and Gaye Brief, but we might take on one of them."

Last year's Stillorgan Hurdle provided the first and third in the Triumph Hurdle, and five of the first six home in yesterday's running hold that Cheltenham engagement.

The race went to Marc Millar, the favourite, whose delayed challenge succeeded by a neck from Dancing Guy. This pair, Reflex Action (fourth) and Nino Volador, who finished sixth after some sloppy jumping, are likely to renew rivalry at Cheltenham, although bookmakers did not appear to take too much notice of the form.

GREASEPAINT REMAINS FAVOURITE

GREASEPAINT, runner-up in the last two Grand Nationals, retained his position as favourite for next month's race when third under top weight in yesterday's Harold Clarke Leopardstown 'Chase, writes Tony Stafford.

Tommy Carmody kept the 10-year-old in mid-division until beginning a run four fences from home. He made ground into third place at the second-last, but then weight and lack of condition told.

They drew 20 lengths clear of the weakening Greasepaint on the run-in, but opinion was divided as to which had prevailed.

Tom Taaffe, earlier successful on Fredcoteri, admitted on his return to unsaddle, that he had dropped his whip approaching the last fence, and the photo-finish verdict, which was a short-head in favour of Seskin Bridge added to the jockey's discomfort.

Cheltenham pointers

There were more Cheltenham pointers in the Wessel Arkle Perpetual Challenge Cup 'Chase, in which Buck House gave a scintillating display of fast jumping.

But the outcome may have been different had Boreen Prince, the favourite, not dislodged his jockey Brendan Sheridan four fences from home when a close second.

Sheridan said: "He jumped the fence all right but once he cleared it, he dived to the right and there was no way I could stay with him."

Mouse Morris, Buck Houses's trainer, would be optimistic about the seven-year-old's chance in next month's Arkle Challenge Trophy at Cheltenham if that race were run on good ground. "But if the going is soft, he'll simply not run," he said.

Whitaker England's first full-time coach

By A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

A SPECIAL council meeting of the Hockey Association yesterday gave its approval to the appointment for the first time of a professional full-time team coach to the England national side.

David Whitaker, a schoolmaster at Marlborough College, intends to take a two-year sabbatical to fil lthe appointment.

The cost of the new post is estimated at £36,000 but it's been confidently forecast that an increase in club affiliation fees will not be necessary.

Whitaker, a member of Southgate's European Cup-winning sides of the late 1970's and capped 104 times by Great Britain and England between 1973 and 1980, is well-sited for the job and highly respected in world hockey.

Not unanimous

A former England coach, he also coached the Great Britain team which won bronze medals in the Los Angeles Olympics and last December the Champions Trophy in Karachi.

The introduction of a professional did not receive unanimous suport, opposition mainly coming from the North. But it should provide England with their best chance yet of reaching the final stages of the World Championship. The next World Cup is due to be staged in London in October 1986.

The secial meeting also set up an appeals committee of chairman Western, Apleby and Mayer to consider the case of Slough's Ravinder Laly, the former Kenyan international.

Laly was suspended by his county for 81 days, following an unpleasant incident during the Sussex versus Bucks South semi-final at East Grinstead last November.

The original suspension was subsequently increased to six months by the South council, wereupon the appeal was lodged.

Convincing Bates surges through to semi-final

By JOHN PARSONS

Bates, well in command at the time, allowed himself to become distracted by line-calls, interruptions from the adjoining court and, one suspects, his concern about difficulties he has had in obtaining the visa he needs to play in Cairo next week.

He remembered in good time, however, that he did not need to do a great deal more than keep the ball in play to lure Morten Christensen, 19, to beat himself.

Bates, impressively registering a 100 per cent. record on first serves in the final set, won 6-4, 1-6, 6-2 and served consistently well throughout against the erratic Dane.

Christensen was just as likely to lash the ball into the roof immediately after hitting a stunning winner and in moments of acute despair gave a more than passable impression of Dr Magnus Pyke.

One certainly did not need to speak Danish to understand how Christensen felt, especially after he was beaten by Bates's dominant serve-and-volley thrusts on the only two breakback points he was allowed at 2-4 in the final set.

Eriksson next

The British No. 4 now meets Stefan Eriksson, 21, the unexpected Swedish national champion who yesterday beat South African Denys Maasdorp 6-2, 6-2.

"It won't be easy. I'm not who during his own careless exactly sure how I'm going to second set also seemed to be try and play him yet," said Bates, keeping one eye on Eriksson playing against Maasdorp.

Eriksson, despite his endless topspin from the back of the court, is not a typically stoic Swede, possibly because he has spent two years studying in the United States. At times he volubly expresses his feelings.

What is impressive is the way he channels anger into positive aggression. Immediately after breaking Maasdorp in the first game of the second set, he was understandably upset by a call which put hi munder pressure at 0-30 on his own serve.

His response was a spectacular ace and then two more in that game twords his match total of 10, an dhe went on to save four break-points and deny his opponent the only significant chance he had to fight his way back.

Whatever happens today and, one hopes, in the final this tournament, in the view of Paul Hutchins, the British team manager, ought to be one of last satellites for Bates. "Now he has to get out there on the international circuit full time," Mr Hutchins said.

Lundgren through

In today's other semi-final (10.30 a.m.) Peter Lundgren, last year's winner from Sweden, who beat New Zealander Bruce Derlin 6-3, 6-3, meets Menno Oosting, of Holland, who overcame fellow countryman Marc Albert 6-3, 6-1.

Reviewing the circuit Mr Hutchins said it had provided British players seeking the first rung on the ladder — and a chance to collect world ranking points— with nearly 400 matches. He described it as money well spent.

It is the L T A's responsibility, he said, to provide competitive opportunities for players and to stay with them until they are either anxious or able to branch out on their own.

Under this umbrella support Stephen Shaw has just spent a week working with Dennis Ralston (coach to Chris Lloyd for Paris and Wimbledon) in Dallas, before returning home from the Delray Beach tournament in Florida.

QTR - FINALS. — P. Lundgren (Sweden) bt B. Derlin (N Z) 6-3, 6-3; M. Oosting (Holland) bt M. Albert (Holland) 6-3, 6-1; S. Eriksson (Sweden) bt D. Maasdorp (S. Africa) 6-2, 6-2; J. Bates (Surrey) bt M. Christensen (Denmark) 6-4, 1-6, 6-2.

LLOYD HOME IN 3 SETS

BRITAIN'S John Lloyd was a first-round winner in the men's Grand Prix lawn tennis tournament in La Quinta, California, beating Dan Cassidy of the United States, in three sets.

Lloyd easily took the first set at 6-1, lost the second 6-3, then recovered to clinch the match at 6-2 in the third.

The fifth seed, Johan Kriek, and the 11th, Guillermo Volus (Argentina) were eliminated by unseeded 20-year-olds Tarik Benhabiles (France) beat Kriek 6-1, 7-5 in a second-round match, and Hans Schwaier (West Germany) beat Vilas 6-7, 6-4, 6-4 in a first-round match.

Another seed to go out was the Australian, John Fitzgerald, beaten 6-4, 3-6, 6-4 by Hank Pfister. But Scott Davis defeated Stan Smith, and Brad Gilbert beat Pavel Slozil (Czechoslovakia).

Arias beaten

In the Grand Prix tournament in Toronto, the fourth-seeded Jimmy Arias, of the United States, wilted under blistering serves and approach shots from the Paraguayan Francisco Gonzalez, who won 6-1, 6-7, 7-5.

In a one-sided first set, Arias returned serves only to be jerked out of position on the next shot, leaving Gonzales vistas of open court to volley into. But Arias fought gamely in the last two sets and put together 14 break points and a service break before making his exit.

The top-seed, Anders Jarryd (Sweden) had to struggle to oust Sammy Giammalva, 5-7, 7-6, 6-2. Eliat Teitscher, the second seed, beat Glen Michibata of Canada, and the third seed, Kevin Curren, beat the Australian Brad Drewett 6-2, 6-4.

Seventh-seeded Barbara Potter of the U.S. survived a scare to beat West German Bettina Bunge 7-5, 7-6 in the first round of the $150,000 Virginia Slims tournament at Oakland, California. Potter, 25, served for the match at 5-3 in the second but Bunge's pinpoint returns sent the match into a tiebreaker.

Claudia Kohde-Kilsch of West Germany, seeded fifth, registered her first win in three tournaments this year, beating American Kim Sands 6-1, 6-2.

Camille Benjamin arrived late for her scheduled afternoon match, blaming transport problems. She was fined £480 by the Women's Tennis Association and her spot went to an alternative, Lea Antonoplis, who lost 6-3, 7-6 to Lori McNeil.

European Bobsleigh

GIOBELLINA SCRAPES IN

Switzerland's defending champion, Silvio Giobellina, had to come from behind to avoid the ignominy of failing to qualify for this weekend's four-man competition at the European Bobsleigh Championships in St Moritz yesterday.

The 1982 world champion was in danger of finishing last in the Swiss race-off when he had the slowest time of the four on the first lauf.

But the track record-holder, 30, put in the second fastest run on the second lauf to finish ahead of Erich Scharer, who was third, and Ralph Pichler who dropped out.

But it was the veteran Hans Hiltebrand, 40, who provided the Swiss with their biggest hope of gold medal success on Sunday.

Hiltebrand was more than a second inside the track record yesterday with 1 min 05·59 sec on his first descent.

He was only 34 hundredths of a second slower on his next run, and on that sort of form, could be the man to beat East Germany's Olympic champion Wolfgang Hoppe.

Britain's Nick Phipps and his Allied Steel-sponsored crew of Bob Thorne, Paddy Bredin and Alan Cearns had a best time yesterday of 1·07·47 but hope to knock almost a second off that in today's final practice session.

SMYTH HAS BIG POINT TO MAKE

By Our Bowls Correspondent

Gerry Smyth, the England, Middlesex and Paddington stylist, meets John Marchant, of Lewisham, in the £6,000 Lombard Champion of Champions Southern Region finals at Grattons, Crawley, today.

He is bound to make a real fight of it for he, Colin Hooper and Steve Halmai suffered a surprise defeat by Jack Neil, Chris Stevens and Dennis McDonald in the £1,600 Ronny Lamb Liveries Open Triples at Paddington on Tuesday.

Smyth is noted for strong recoveries after set breaks and earning a place in the Lombard National finals is an obvious opportunity for him.

Selectors reconsider international deadline

By PAT BESFORD

THE decision to pick Britain's team for the only full international of the season, against Sweden at Blackpool on April 12 and 13, without waiting for results from the National Short Championships is to be reconsidered at a meeting on Sunday.

The Championships, in Manchester over the Easter weekend, are the first major home event of th sason in which all candidates for the match squad are likely to take part.

Austin Rawlinson, chairman of the British selectors said: "The team is being chosen on March 23 at the request of the sponsors so that they can get the best publicity and also to ease administration.

Sponsors not involved

"We have not considered leaving vacancies in the selections to allow changes after the National Championships."

Joy Stromberg, public relations officer of the sponsors the Yorkshire Bank, denied any involvement in this decision.

She said: "The March selection date was not at my request, even though there is the problem of printing the programme because there are so few days between the two events. But I will raise this on Sunday."

41 lb PIKE IS BRITISH BEST

By DEREK FLETCHER

Nevill Fickling, of Lea, Gainsborough, a fishery inspector with the Severn - Trent Water Authority, will submit a claim today for a British record pike of 41lb 6oz, to the National Association of Specialist Anglers.

The previous record was a 40-pounder caught by Peter Hancock at Horsey Mere, Norfolk, in 1967.

Fickling, a pike specialist, caught his record breaker on the Norfolk Broads using a smelt as bait. It was kept in water in a specially designed nylon sack until it could be weighed witnessed by two other anglers.

He said yesterday that when he returned the pike to the water it swam away in a majestic manner.

He has now caught 118 pike weighing over 20lb. His previous best, weighing 34lb, was caught last year at the same secret location.

London may make bid for 1992 Olympics

THE possibility of proposing London as the venue for the 1992 Olympic Games is to be discussed next month, writes Pat Besford.

The British Olympic Committee will discuss, on March 19, the feasibility of mounting a rush bid against six other cities already in the lists.

Dick Palmer, general secretary of the British Olympic Association, said: "The initiative came originally from Neil Macfarlane, the Minister for Sport, who at his request met the dozen members of our general purposes committee on Feb. 5.

Government suggestion

"At this time, the Minister gave us to understand that the government was anxious that we examine this possibility for 1992."

Later yesterday Mr Macfarlane clarified his position. He said: "Comment about government involvement is speculative. Any action, in the short term, lies with the B O A."

Under the rules of the International Olympic Committee, it is the host city, approved by the N O C, which must make the application. And for 1992 this must be in by October, 1986.

Costly study

The Greater London Council carried out an elaborate feasibility study with the idea of offering for 1988. This was abandoned because of costs. Soon there will be no G L C or alternative body to speak for London.

The cities bidding for 1992, who have all been preparing for years, are Barcelona, in the homeland of Juan Antonio Samaranch, Spain's president of the I O C, Paris, the birthplace of Monique Berlioux, I O C director, Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Belgrade, Brisbane and New Delhi.

IN-OUT TOMES BACK AGAIN FOR SCOTLAND

By JOHN MASON

ALAN TOMES, who has been in and out of international teams since being first capped nine years ago, estimates that he will be making his fourth comeback when he plays for Scotland against Wales at Murrayfield on Saturday week.

The recall of Tomes, 33, is one of three changes Scotland, who have lost four successive matches since winning the Grand Slam last season, have made in the team beaten in Paris last Saturday.

David Leslie . . . captain calls for better control.

Roger Baird, who got to Paris but withdrew on the eve of the match because of shin troubles, is back on the left wing in place of Jim Pollock and Gordon Hunter, the long-serving reserve scrum-half, is capped in his own right in succession to Roy Laidlaw.

Pollock, brought into Scotland's squad last Thursday when Iwan Tukalo pulled a hamstring in the pre-flight training session, returns to the bench.

Tukalo, the left wing against Ireland, and Laidlaw, who has a badly strained back, were not considered.

The large, cheerful Tomes, who has been brought back in place of Tom Smith, of Gala, declined a modest wager after Saturday's match that he would be required to play against Wales for the eighth time in a chequered career.

Go at them

He travelled to Paris with friends to watch the match and his companions insisted afterwards that their amiable friend —all 6ft 5in, 17 stone of him— would line up in the second row against Wales for his 40th cap.

After defeats by Rumania in Bucharest, by Australia and Ireland in Edinburgh and by France at the weekend, Tomes spoke for all Scots yesterday when he declared that it would be no good attempting to contain Wales.

"We've got to go at them," he said. "This is a make-or-break game for us. I'm delighted to be back.

"I was over in Paris and after watching the game, I had a feeling I might be brought back. I've been written off three times before, so this is probably my fourth comeback!"

Laidlaw's run of 30 consecutive matches for Scotland ends because of his back injury. Hunter, who will be partnering John Rutherford, his Selkirk colleague, has been on the bench for two-thirds of those matches besides appearing twice as the replacement.

David Leslie, 32, leads the side again and, in conjunction with Colin Telfer, the coach, will urge Scotland's ball-winners to exercise greater control, not only at the lineout. To that extent seven of the Grand Slam pack will be on duty.

France, who go to Dublin to meet Ireland on Saturday week, have announced an unchanged team, though sundry warnings were given by Jacques Fouroux, the coach, in the subsequent discussions.

Patrick Esteve, said Fouroux, had been retained out of recognition of his past performances for France.

Hospitals Cup

MARY'S SCRAPE TO FINAL

By RUPERT CHERRY

St Mary's ... 9, Guy's ... 6

NEITHER of these semi-finalists at Teddington yesterday looked potential winners of the Hospitals Cup but St Mary's scraped through to their 37th final and their ninth in succession.

Both sides had enough of the ball and sufficient opportunities to win the match by scoring tries. Their failure to do so was dismal and victory came by three penalty goals to two, the winner being scored in the last few minutes.

Throughout Guy's looked the more likely to gain tries. They are an improvement on their recent predecessors and this was their first appearance in a semi-final since 1974.

The ground was hard underneath, with some mud and snow on top, but there were large spaces fit for good running and Guy's, after overcoming some pressure, tried to make use of them.

Forward pass

A forward pass robbed them of a try but Hackett kicked two penalty goals while Mary's had only the first of Booth's three penalty goals by half time.

The attacking by both sides with the ball in their hands was unimaginative, however, and far too often the direction of running was infield.

When the ball did reach the wings there was still little progress and late in the game Reece, on the Guy's left wing, let a good chance go by not making for the corner flag.

St Mary's. — J. Booth; R. Robinson, R. Harvey, M. Dixon, P. Longden; J. Miles, C. Whitworth; A. Budgen, M. Kenny, R. Bailey, C. Geest, S. Knott, C. Harwood, P. Horner, F. Tootz-Hobson (I. Bain).

Guy's. — M. Hackett; M. Coleman, A. Jones, J. Leigh, M. Reece; N. Poole, R. Docker; G. Parry, R. Dixon, M. Scott, F. Davis, G. Boorkmore, A. Watts, C. McHarry, G. Smith.

Stevens disguises Royal Navy cracks

By MICHAEL AUSTIN

Royal Navy ... 10pts, Civil Service ... 3

RICK STEVENS, the Royal Navy scrum-half, scored two tries from contrasting origins, to gloss over his side's disarray at Portsmouth yesterday in their final game before the Inter-Services Championship.

The Navy, who meet the Army at Twickenham on Saturday week, can glean little confidence, apart from a dictatorial finale, yielding Stevens second try, which obscured much of their earlier lethargy.

The Civil Service, who lost 27-29 to the Army in their only previous game, lacked Ring and Hadley, their Welsh internationals, but fielded a sprinkling of experienced players, including Goodwin, the Captain and Moseley lock.

Chance goes begging

Longstaff, the Gloucester flanker, Wier of Fydde and Dickenson, a Barbarians prop from Richmond, also offered touches of skill but Goodfellow, the outside half, seemed a potential saviour when they trailed 4-3 in the final ten minutes.

Goodfellow, of Newbridge, fortified his side with a prodigious left boot and sought a set-piece position to attempt a winning dropped goal, which his tiring forwards could not provide.

As the game wore on, the Navy drew strength from superior fitness on a firm foothold and from a commanding back row, who inspired the conclusive try from a 45-yard move with five minutes remaining.

Hughes, Nottingham's number eight in their John Player Cup match against London Welsh on Saturday, linked with Wood and Sheldon, Allen accepted the next pass and Stevens appeared instinctively on the inside to complete a high speed try.

The watching Royal Australian Navy Under-21 side, who begin a nine match European tour against U S Portsmouth Under-21s on Saturday, were impressed at last. Jet lag, woolly head gear and a poor match had given them an unappetising introduction to Britain.

Martin Hawthorne, the deputy referee, had travelled a much shorter distance, from Horsham, Sussex, but with greater urgency, when Roger Parker, the appointed North Midlands referee, suffered a car breakdown in Oxfordshire.

Other cylinders were also misfiring, especially the Navy's, who had amassed more than 30 points while winning both the previous corresponding fixtures.

Stevens, alert and inventive, scored his first try when an inviting loose ball appeared on the blind side close to an unguarded line. His second from collective skills, with Allen kicking the conversion. Goodfellow had earlier landed an angled penalty goal.

Civil Service: P. Saunders; M. Hewer, K. Gamble, M. Burt, R. Osborne; P. Goodfellow, M. Weir; A. Pearce, T. Martin, W. Wickenson, T. Chapman, J. Davidson, G. Lewis, M. Longstaff, M. Brownlow.

Referee: M. Hawthorne (Royal Navy).

Wales delay choice for Murrayfield

THE Wales selectors, seeking sundry reassurances, have delayed the choice of the team to meet Scotland until after Saturday's Cup matches. The Scotland team for the international at Murrayfield on Saturday week was announced yesterday, writes John Mason.

The Welsh matches on Jan. 19, against France, and last Saturday, against England in Cardiff, were postponed because of ground conditions so the trip to Murrayfield will be the start to their Five Nations' season. Scotland will be playing their third game.

Terry Holmes, who was to have led Wales against France and England, says with mock seriousness that the team have done well to reach March unbeaten. When the smiles cease Wales must feel reasonably placed to secure the Triple Crown, come what may.

Should Wales win in Scotland, home matches with Ireland and England, rearranged for April 20, follow. The other away game is against France in Paris on March 30, by which time the French could be out of the championship hunt. Much hinges on the engagement in Dublin on Saturday week.

A Welsh Rugby Union spokesman said yesterday that it was hoped to choose the team to meet Scotland during the weekend. "If the weather does improve so that the weekend matches take place," he added, "we will hold a full squad training session in Cardiff on Monday."

In addition to the Schwepes Cu pgames in Wales the selectors though not represente din person, will keep an ear tuned to the activities of London Welsh, who are away to Nottingham in the fourth round of the John Player Special Cup.

London Welsh, led with considerable aplomb this winter by Clive Rees, who served his country valiantly over a long period though winning only a handful of caps, possess an outstanding front row at club level, mobility at lock, height and a forthright backrow.

Though for the present there must be slight doubts about ground conditions in the Midlands, the weather forecasts locally, London Welsh have been assured, are beginning to sound optimistic. A gentle thaw began yesterday.

Jeremy Hughes, the London Welsh right wing, who was hurt in the previous round against Headingley, may miss Saturday's match against Nottingham at Beeston. Should he not come through a fitness test tonight at Old Deer Park, Andrew Yeandle will play. The clubs have not met previously.

John Player Cup

Lydney set for another classic

By DAVID GREEN

ONE of the most intriguing of Saturday's fourth round John Player Cup ties is at Regentsholme where, weather permitting, Lydney receive Sale in a repeat of their third-round meeting two years ago.

The match contained one classic element of a cup tie, a senior club of great traditions visiting a less well-known one.

Sale prop Trevor Simon broke a leg after eight minutes and Lydney, exploiting their opponents' reshuffled pack led 9-3 at half-time. Sale then gradually got on top and two late tries gained them victory by 16 points to nine.

The vigour of Lydney's approach and, perhaps, their unexpected skill had almost undone the northern club. Sale skipper, Steve Smith was quoted as saying that the game was harder than England v. France and that he hoped he would never play against Lydney again.

Anyone with knowledge of the genial Smith's hyperbolic turn of phrase would take this as a compliment. But Lydney, understandably, were hurt and apologies were necessary for remarks made tongue-in-cheek and taken out of context.

Ruffled feathers have now been smoothed and both clubs are looking forward to the game. Curiously, neither Smith nor Lydney back row man Tony Curtis, who gave him such a hard time, will be playing.

Smith's work commitments have been interfering with his availability and he is omitted in favour of Howard Fitton, his long-time understudy, and Curtis has not recovered from injury sustained in training before Lydney's fourth round 29-11 victory at Redruth.

Challenging hard

Sale, coached by the highly respected Des Seabrook, have lost only twice this season. One of those defeats was at Neath when, owing to county calls, they fielded a second XV.

Lydney, too, are in good form and challenging hard for the leadership of the Bass South-West merit table. With Gloucester and Bristol on their list, they are unlikely to be overawed by mere reputation.

Many of Lydney's hopes will rest on their halfback pairing of Paul Howell, who has had impressive spells with Gloucester and Bristol, and John Saville, and on their back row, of Bobby Fowke, Bob Carpenter and Keith "Spiderman" Davis.

The necessity for a stable platform from which these players can operate has been recognised and regular hooker Phil Hopkins has been omitted in favour of the greater strength and bulk of former Gloucester player Steve Ashmead.

Experience

Lydney have class outsides in experienced full-back Ian Wilkins and wingers Keith Powell and Mark Fennell, so Sale's defence will ignore the wider areas of the field at their peril.

Sale are confident in the experience of former England centre Tony Bond, Andy Simpson and Mike Higgs in the front row and Ian McKie at lock, and in the dash of young flankers Simon Tipping and Leinster open side Niall Gaffney.

On paper Sale should win for their experience in 1983 will have taught them much about Forest of Dean rugby. The bookmakers will lay odds against Lydney but will be keeping them pretty short.

Saracens on crusade at Gloucester

ALEX KEAY, Saracens' captain and No. 8, is, almost by contradiction, a crusader, who anticipates the expedition to Gloucester for Saturday's John Player fourth round tie with relish, not trepidation writes Michael Austin.

Keay believes that playing a Cup match at Kingsholm is the toughest challenge in English rugby.

"Going to Leicester or Bath would have been difficult but I think Gloucester are even harder to beat on their own ground," he says.

After playing 17 matches at home without defeat since late November, Gloucester command the respect Keay grants them, but he stresses: "I would still rather go there than Lichfield. At least, we know what to expect."

Keay, fair-haired and forthright, draws optimism, even confidence, from Saracens' unified pack which is developing a reputation for set-piece play and especially scrummaging. Going in Gloucester without a scrummage is akin to sky-diving without a parachute.

Keay, a Saracen since 1976 apart from a season with Bedford, prefers to dwell on wins over Bridgend (21-16) and Gosforth (18-13) in the previous round.

Balanced side

"We showed character and now have a side of experience," he says. "We are not among the most fashionable London clubs but this Saracens team is the best-balanced I have known, even bearing in mind the side which lost at Waterloo in the semi-finals eight years ago."

A taxing fixture list has restricted Saracens to 12 wins in 25 games, but Keay, who has played in every match, says: "We have achieved continuity and owe a lot to, among others, Floyd Steadman, our scrum half, and Andy Jaszczak, a lock."

"All these payers have such a good grounding in Welsh fixtures that it eases the daunting challenge of playing at Gloucester," he says.

Cup preparations in adverse weather have been assisted by the much-appreciated availability of Tottenham Hotspur's indoor facilities at White Hart Lane.

Saracens, who have added Harlequins to their regular list next season, bristle with ambition as a club, their lower sides, the Crusaders, Infidels, Turks, Sultans, Saladins, Scimitars and Griffons, adding a touch of Eastern or rather, North London, promise.

Keay began last season as captain and coach—a rigorous dual commitment. This season Keay liaises with John Lockwood, Saracens' former hooker, and now forwards' coach, and Tony Russ, who organises the backs.

Speedway

KING REJECTS CRADLEY

Lance King, the United States rider who finished third in the World Speedway Championships last year, will not race for Cradley Heath next season.

The Californian, 21, has failed to agree financial terms with the Midland team.

Reading are hoping to sign their former rider John Davis. Davis, 30, has been without a top club since Wimbledon decided to drop into the National League, but the move hinges on whether Reading can secure work permits for three of their Scandinavian riders — per Jonsson, Pierre Brannefors and Einar Kyllinstad.

U.S. Golf

SEVE HAS POINT TO PROVE

By ALEX LANCASTER in Miami

FUZZY ZOELLER and Severiano Ballesteros, U.S. and Open champions respectively, have different goals as they begin their 1985 PGA Tour seasons in the Doral-Eastern Open in Miami today.

Zoeller is coming back from major back surgery that sidelined him much of last season and at one time raised questions as to whether he could return to competitive golf.

"I'm just glad to be walking and breathing and playing again. I don't expect anything this week, or for the next couple of weeks," said Zoeller, who has played only two competitive rounds since his U S Open victory last summer.

While Zoeller is simply attempting to get his game back to a competitive level, Ballesteros, 27, is looking at an opportunity to establish himself as the outstanding player in golf. "He's the man most likely to dominate the game in the next few years," says Jack Nicklaus.

Source of wonder

Ballesteros is viewed with awe by Americans, especially after outlasting Tom Watson at St Andrews's to win his second Open. But it is a source of wonder to them that he has never dominated in the States as he has done in Europe.

The long course here, with its many blue lakes, appears tailor-made for the Spaniard's adventurous style and, as usual, he will be followed by a large crowd of Spanish-speaking locals.

Sandy Lyle, who has made the long trip back from the Australian Masters, hopes to start here, unlike Bernhard Langer and Nick Faldo, who are taking a well-earned rest.

Lyle, who is well on his way to making the amount of dollars necessary to gain him "card," likes the course, as does Peter Oosterhuis.

Oosterhuis was very disappointed by his poor finish in Santiago on Sunday after starting so well. But his policy has always been to keep chipping away at the prize money and he is doing so successfully.

WU STARTS FAVOURITE

By BILL JOHNSON in Jakarta

Wu Ming-Yeh, from Taiwan, winner in Singapore last week, starts out a strong favourite to capture her second women's golf title in the 54-hole Indonesian Open, the final leg of the Asian circuit, which begins in Jakarta today.

Victory in the Singapore Open carried Wu to the top of the order of merit table, where her total of 442 points leaves her 24 points clear of Kayoko Ikoma, from Japan.

This fifth and final tournament of the circuit offers a rewarding conclusion to the tour. The championship has a prize fund of $27,000, there is $9,000 for next Sunday's pro-am and another $8,000 for the leading five professionals in the final order of merit.

Two short but heavy downpours of rain have left the 5,782 yard tree-lined par 71 course playing long which, like Singapore, should give an edge to the longer hitters.

This was confirmed by the performances of Canadian Karin Mundinger and Kim Shipman, from the United States, though at the final count the magical short game of Wu proved decisive in Singapore.

REINSTATE ME, SAYS EVANS

Duncan Evans, British Amateur champion at Royal Porthcawl in 1980, has applied to the English Golf Union for reinstatement as an amateur after only three years as a professional.

Evans, 26, a former Wales international and Staffordshire county player, represented Britain and Ireland in the 1981 Walker Cup against the United States at Cypress Point.

But, during his time on the professional tour, he won less than £3,000 in prize money. His best finish was 12th in a Zambian tournament.

Bulow and Wheatley lift Kenilworth

KENILWORTH, unbeaten leaders of the Banks and Silvers Merit Table, are prospering under the captaincy of Bub Bulow, a centre, and the coaching of Chris Wheatley, one of Midlands rugby's most durable characters.

Wheatley, having played 328 games as a Coventry centre, returned to Kenilworth a decade ago, played on, and still appears in their second and third teams to complement his new coaching duties.

Kenilworth are renowned for other stalwart club men, including Trevor Watton. Warwickshire's president and chairman of selectors for England Schools 18 group, and Dai Davies, a former National Schools selector. Coventry connections remain equally strong.

Martin Clifford, a former Coventry wing, has formed a successful centre partnership with Bulow, who says: "We have a policy of playing 15-man rugby and gathered confidence from wining 11 of our first 13 games."

Kenilworth have now lost seven of 72 matches and thrived on Glyn Owen, a full-back, Neil Robinson, a flanker back from Leamington, and Peter Henderson, another back row forward who joined from Coventrians this season.

Over the first decade, Kenilworth have earned a reputation as one of Warwickshire's most sociable clubs and energetic fund-raisers. They are now seeking £65,000 to buy the freehold of two rented pitches.

Kenilworth's Coventry connection goes beyond Wheatley and Clifford. Jim Cornett, a senior official, is a former Coventry secretary, Robin Cardwell and Steve Oliver, recent Coventry Sankers are still active, and Chris Holmes: a member of the first England squad in the 1960s, captains the Pirates, Kenilworth's fifth team.

McNulty's round of a lifetime puts him six shots up

By ADRIAN FREDERICK in Phalaborwa

MARK McNULTY scored a course record 63 to open up a six-stroke lead after the first round of the Phalaborwa Classic at the Hans Merenski course in South Africa yesterday.

"It was the best tournament round of my life and I enjoyed playing well on such a difficult course," said McNulty, who is the Order of Merit leader and won the Swaziland tournament a fortnight ago.

On a hot day and in a strong breeze, South African McNulty produced some of the best putting ever seen on the Sunshine Circuit. He needed only 25 putts and said he had hit the ball superbly.

Colleague's compliment

Irishman David Feherty, who was in a group on 70, said he had never expected to be seven shots behind after the way he played. "That must rank as one of the best rounds ever," said Feherty of McNulty's 63.

Feherty, who became engaged to a South African girl recently, had a good chance to take second place on his own after going out in three under 33. But he dropped two strokes coming home and only a birdie at the last put him on 70.

With him on that mark were Mark Sharman and Brian Evans. Sharman is desperately trying to make the top 60 on the money list in order to qualify for next week's tournament of champions at Kensington in Johannesburg.

He produced equal loops of 35 in one of the better rounds he has played this circuit. Evans, after featuring in the early tournaments, has been very quiet of late and returned to form with a back nine 34.

Ian Mosey was on 71, after a round in which he also let things slip on the back nine. He turned in 35, this following his 68 in the pro-am, but he dropped shots on the 13th and 15th to be back in 38.

But Steve Bennett, Andrew Chandler and Mark Johnson were on 72. Johnson played in the same group as McNulty and seemed to hit the ball a lot better than nine strokes behind would indicate.

The day belonged entirely to McNulty who now has his sights set on beating his own Order of Merit record earnings of £40,000 established in 1981-82. He is already more than half way towards the target and, if his form is any guideline, he should make it easily.

63—M. McNulty.

By RICHARD JAMES in Lagos

TONY JACKLIN, who recently announced his retirement at the age of 40, returns to tournament golf for the £125,000 Nigerian Open starting in Lagos today.

An appearance fee of around £9,000 has persuaded the former British and U S Open champion to fly to West Africa from his home in Southern Spain.

Jacklin, who plans to concentrate on preparing to captain Europe's Ryder Cup side against the Americans in September, B B C television commentary and his real estate and golf business in Spain, admitted: "The offer was too good to refuse — the money has been in my bank for three weeks."

After a five over par 76 in yesterday's Pro-Am on the Ikoyi course, Jacklin, who has not played a major event since last summer's German Open, confessed to feeling rusty.

Scottish rival

He said it was difficult to switch to "fiddling it around" but with a first prize of around £21,000 at stake you can be sure he will be trying.

Scotland's Ewan Murray won last year and, as a result, topped the Safari circuit order of merit. He could well be a force to reckon with again.

Other new arrivals include Zambian Open champion Karl Mason, David J. Russell, Malcolm Gregson, and Tommy Horton captain of the British Caledonian Cup side held to a draw by West Africa in Lagos earlier this month.

Brian Barnes, who was a convincing winner in that match but has been unable to hit a shot since because of the snow and ice at home in Sussex, also makes his debut in the 100 degrees heat and soaking humidity.

Two new browns have been introduced to toughen still further the par 71 course and it is unlikely that Peter Tupling's world record 39 below par winning aggregate in 1981 will be threatened.

He is playing well again and so is Yorkshire's David Jagger who has taken the title three times and Scotland's Bill Longmuir, twice Nigerian champion and runner-up last year.

David Llewellyn, winner of the Ivory Coast Open on Sunday, and two more former winners in Lagos, Ryder Cup international Gordon Brand and John Morgan, are also strong contenders.

BALLESTEROS NEARS MILLION

The Open Champion has amassed £644,683 in 11 seasons in professional golf, nearly £190,000 more than Britain's Nick Faldo, who holds second place in the all-time European money list.

LEADING EARNERS.—S. Ballesteros (Sp'n) £644,683. 1: N. Faldo £455,252. 3: B. Langer (Germany) £438,759. 4. Other British places.—S. Lyle, £429,621. 4: S. Torrance, £397,485. 5: N. Coles, £320,963. 6: B. Gallacher, £305,464. 8: H. Clark, £295,292. 10.

EGU AVOID RELIANCE ON SPONSORSHIP

By MICHAEL WILLIAMS

THOUGH several offers have been made, the English Golf Union have so far resisted approaches for sponsorship of tournaments such as the English Amateur Championship and Brabazon Trophy, their two principal events.

John Wild, who takes over as president of the EGU next month, said in London yesterday that he is by no means against sponsorship in amateur golf, as long as it is controlled.

With nearly 1,400 golf clubs in England the revenue from the many thousands of golfers through the old "bob a nob" scheme (now 45p per member) is sufficient to make the EGU financially independent.

Mr Wild and a past president of the Union, Neil Hotchkin, against following the example of the Scottish Golf Union, whose amateur championship is now both sponsored by and named J&B Whisky.

Office move

The EGU are nevertheless continuing to advance with the times. They are shortly to move their headquarters from Woking-ham to Leicester.

And with the impending retirement of Iain Erskine, the secretary, they are replacing him with a new secretary, Keith Wright, and a championship secretary, who has still to be named.

They will then play an inaugural international match against Spain at Las Brisas, after which most of the team members will take part in the Spanish Amateur Championship on the same course.

MORE MONEY FOR SPANISH EVENTS

The European golf tour was given another financial lift yesterday when the Ceposa Madrid Open and Benson and Hedges Spanish Open announced increased prize funds for 1985.

Both will offer 20 million pesetas, about £101,000. The tour prizes will be £17,000. The Madrid Open is at Puerto de Hierro, April 25-28 while the Spanish Open is at Valromanas, Barcelona, Oct. 24-27.

SEVEN-GOAL LIVERPOOL CRUSH YORK

By MICHAEL CALVIN

Liverpool ... 7, York City ... 0

LIVERPOOL paid York the compliment of being at their most ruthless at Anfield last night when they scored seven times on their way to an F A Cup quarter-final tie away to Southampton or Barnsley.

York's romantic progress inevitably swelled the gate, but the sense of occasion was enhanced by the special reception reserved for Phil Neal and Kenny Dalglish.

Rush out of character

Rush in the 28th minute, although off balance, fashioned a return pass to Wark who scored his 16th goal of the season with a superb volley.

By then York's defence was in disarray. Rush should have scored minutes from the interval when he found himself clear but Astbury forced him wide and allowed Senior to be on the line to block the eventual shot.

Free header

Three minutes later Wark was allowed time and room to pick his spot with a free header from Dalglish's flighted centre.

Midway through the second half Rush, who has only just regained his sharpness after a cartilage operation, had to be helped off after a robust challenge.

Butler raised the hopes of York's 10,000 followers with a rising drive over the bar but, with Liverpool in such formidable form, it was only a brief respite.

Walsh, the substitute, made a rapid impact. His jinking run in the 72nd minute ende dwith Sbragia in effect teeing the ball up for Neal who scored with undisguised glee.

John Lyall, the West Ham manager, referee Keith Hackett and Dave Bassett, the Wimbledon manager, survey an all-too familiar scene at Plough Lane yesterday—a frost-bound pitch.

Ipswich looking so weather-beaten

IPSWICH are emerging as the unluckiest First Division victims of the weather, with a fixture pile-up that could adversely affect their challenge for the two domestic Cups and their efforts to avoid relegation, writes Donald Saunders.

Their delayed F A Cup-tie with Sheffield Wednesday was postponed again yesterday, because the Portman Road pitch was still frozen.

So, provided the pitch becomes fit in time, they face the possibility of playing four important games in eight days, starting at the end of next week.

"We play Chelsea on the first Saturday, are due to meet Sheffield Wednesday the following Monday in the F A Cup and go to Norwich for the second leg of the Milk Cup semi-final two days later, explained David Rose, their secretary.

"Then we will be away either to Everton in the F A Cup or West Bromwich in the League on the second Saturday."

Not happy

Not surprisingly, Ipswich are not at all happy at being told by the F A they must take on Sheffield Wednesday only 48 hours before their crucial Milk Cup tussle with neighbouring Norwich.

"This could ruin our chances in both competitions," emphasised Mr Rose. "It does not give the lads much hope.

"So I prefer to regard the Monday week arrangement as provisional and will be asking the F A to reconsider their decision."

"We want more breathing space between two games, though I appreciate time is getting short in each competition."

Ipswich's demanding programme could be further complicated if they are not able to go ahead with the much delayed first leg of their Milk Cup semi-final against Norwich this Saturday.

"We had a little rain today, though it is still very cold," said Mr Rose. "If we get much rain before Saturday, we could have a lake here.

"There is a lot of ice on the pitch. If it continues to freeze every night, we could have a skating rink."

The other fifth round F A Cup-ties yet to start—at Southampton, Luton and Wimbledon—and the second leg of Chelsea's Milk Cup semi-final against Sunderland have also been postponed until Monday week.

None could be rearranged for next week because so many players are involved in England's World Cup-tie against Northern Ireland, Scotland's visit to Spain and Wales's friendly against Norway.

LEICESTER MAY LOSE LINEKER

By ROGER MALONE

WITH Leicester having become the latest F A Cup victims of Millwall's hungry Lions, speculation is increasing about the future of Gary Lineker, their England striker.

Clubs with much bigger gates than Leicester's usual 15,000 and much better-placed for honours than their 15th spot in the table will note that they no longer have Wembley as a reason for resisting offers.

Lineker, 24, whose 20 goals in a moderate side have earned him a place in next week's World Cup squad, can be bracketed with Nottingham Forest's Peter Davenport and Newcastle's Chris Waddle as possible prime targets for big-city clubs renowned for spending money.

Turned down

Intriguingly, the contracts of all three young strikers come to an end this summer. Their clubs know that fees decided by summer arbitration could be lower than those available this season.

Forest have already rejected Everton's £400,000 offer for Davenport, who has scored 14 goals. Leicester regard Lineker as worth more than twice that figure.

Howard Kendall, Everton's manager, seeks another top-class young striker to supplement Graeme Sharp and the ageing Andy Gray, and because of Adrian Heath's long-term injury Mr Kendall watched Leicester at Millwall.

Naturally he pointed out on Tuesday night that the reason was his team's visit to Leicester on Saturday. Clearly though he was able to kill two birds with one stone. He saw Lineker look sharp on a difficult surface, but miss his scoring chances.

Gordon Milne, Leicester's manager, said yesterday: "I have had no offer for Lineker, and if I do I will keep him informed, because that is the arrangement I have with him.

"Meanwhile, I have told all of the players that we must avoid a fade-out in the League after the disappointment in the cup—and Everton's visit is just the type of fixture to lift our players."

RILEY ON MARK FOR BRISTOL

By A Special Correspondent

Bristol C 1 Hereford U 0
(Bristol C win 2-1 on agg.)

GLYN RILEY earned Bristol City a home tie against Port Vale in the Freight Rover Trophy by scoring the decisive goal five minutes from time

Butler's trickery provided early openings for United with Phillips heading straight at Shaw, Kearns failing by inches to meet a cross and Maddy thundering a drive fractionally over the bar. Butler also tested Shaw with a surprise shot which the goalkeeper failed to hold.

Bristol City composed themselves momentarily, urged on by swift long passes and direct running at the defence by Walsh, but failed to trouble Rose in the Hereford goal.

Bristol raised the tempo in the second half. Rose held a close-range header from Walsh and a lewe drive from Neville, who burst powerfully through the middle.

But Shaw was more impressive at the other end. He saved City with two superb goals within a minute, the first from Emery, the second from the dangerous Butler whose curling cross looked destined for the net until the goalkeeper palmed the ball at as he stretched backwards.

Bristol's sustained late pressure was rewarded when Riley glided through to collect Walsh's pass and beat Rose from 15 yards in the 85th minute.

Bristol City.—Shaw; Stevens, Newman, Curle, Hughes, Riley, Hirst, Neville, Hutchinson, Walsh, Stroud.

New Tour date should help British boats

By TONY FAIRCHILD

THE change of date from June 4 to June 9 for the start of the Tour of Europe race may well greatly help two British clubs—the Royal Western and the Royal Torbay.

The new date, because of the halt at Copenhagen being cancelled, will give crews competing in the Round Britain race more time to get to the start of the new European event.

French threat

The Royal Western race, which starts on July 6, seemed to be under something of a threat from a new French race, from La Rochelle to Annapolis, likely to be a bigger attraction to professional teams.

But the later start from Kiel of the Europe race means that there is now a better chance for crews to compete in the Round Britain and the Tour of Europe—finishing in Sardinia—and with the La Rochelle-Annapolis contest less appealing because the start date remains June 16.

For the Royal Torbay, having just get into the America's Cup game, the later start from Kiel means a later arrival at Torquay of the Tour and with less chance of a clash of interests with the Fastnet race, which finishes at nearby Plymouth.

With the Fastnet starting from Cowes on Aug. 10, the event should be all but concluded for even the minnows of the fleet by Aug. 17, the date the multihull circus is now expected in Torquay.

Good news also for the Royal Western is that they now confirm sponsorship of their race—from Plymouth City Council and with further assistance from Information Processing Services and Dean and Dyball, the civil engineering group.

Work is now nearing completion on the 80ft John Shuttleworth-designed catamaran with which Peter Phillips hopes to be a leading contender for victory in the Round Britain race.

It is now planned to remove the two hulls of the craft from the building at Exeter where they have been constructed at the beginning of March.

Book Review

When the field becomes a stage

By DONALD SAUNDERS

GEOFFREY GREEN has long argued that "somewhere over the rainbow" there is to be found a life where "every day is Christmas Day."

In his autobiography "Pardon Me for Living" (George Allen & Unwin, £9·95), the distinguished former Association Football Correspondent of THE TIMES demonstrates how much he has so far enjoyed his search for that elusive Utopia.

An idyllic childhood in India during the Great War; prep school in Surrey; Shrewsbury; Cambridge — where he won a soccer Blue—a brief spell of teaching and selling insurance; then R A F service in the Second World War provide the colourful background of this charming picture of a world that has gone for ever.

But at the heart of these recollections of a full and rounded life is a love affair with soccer and THE TIMES that has lasted more than 40 years.

Geoffrey Green's views on the game he once played with distinction, as an attacking centre-half with the Corinthians, are best summed up by his response to a Spanish ballet mistress, who had the temerity to suggest writing about football was a "waste of life."

"In football I see ballet and movement; I hear music and I see a stage play," he explained. "There is ballet in the movement of the players; music in the roar of the crowd —now fortissimo, now diminuendo.

"The field is a stage on which a play is acted. But in football you never know the ending. It can be different every time."

Warmly human

During those happy days when Mr Green was with us in Press boxes around the world, he wrote about soccer in a lyrical prose that provided his readers with far greater reward than was usually granted to spectators watching those games.

Yet, this is not just a book about sport. It is a beautifully written account of an intelligent, sensitive, vulnerable man's journey through life, charting his ups his downs, his loves and his rare but sharp disapprovals.

Collins quick to celebrate debut

By KEN MAYS

GEORGE COLLINS, the Camberley teenager to whom promoter Frank Warren paid £50,000 to turn professional, started his new career with a quick win at the Alexandra Pavilion, North London, last night.

McCrory wins

The contests were in support of the W B C flyweight title fight between Charlie Magri, the former champion, and Sot Chitalada, the champion from Thailand.

WINNING START BY DESMOND

By D. J. RUTNAGUR

DESMOND DOUGLAS marked his return to the England side last night with a win over Ralph Wosik in the opening tie of the Super Division match against West Germany in the European Table Tennis League, at Portsmouth.

Unbeaten in the singles event of the league this season, Douglas dropped the first game despite holding a yawning 16-8 lead.

This initial reverse only served to sharpen Douglas' concentration and he won the two following games without any bother.

Douglas had relinquished his grip on the first game because he ceased to assert himself and waited for Wosik to make mistakes, which never came. With the pressure off, Wosik attacked with gusto, drew level at 17 and proved more consistent in the tight finish to the game.

In contrast Carl Prean outclassed Georg Bohm in the first game of the second men's singles, but eventually won by only a whisker, dropping the second game and coming from behind to win the decider.

To start with the German could neither read Prean's service, nor his returns. But after that he went on the attack and Prean, nce pushed back from the table, was less effective. Bohm both looked and finished brilliantly.

Bohm's superiority lasted until he was 14-10 in front in the last game. Prean seemed to lose but he remained undaunted. It was his steady nerve and grim determination that saw him through.

DIFFICULT PASSAGE FOR MEO

By A Special Correspondent

TONY MEO, of Morden, was driven to the limit yesterday before reaching the third round of the £250,000 Dulux British Open Snooker Championship in Derby.

He had to overcome a broken fan-belt and a puncture on his way to the tournament and forfeited the first two frames before going into the last 16 with a 5-4 success over Mike Hallett, of Grimsby.

Meo's nightmare began just north of Watford Gap on the M1. "We left in plenty of time but when the fan-belt snapped we were in trouble," he said. "When we had a puncture in a rear tyre almost immediately afterwards I just couldn't believe it."

These mishaps resulted in Meo arriving 20 minutes late and the rules state that for each 15 minutes, or part thereof, a player is late a frame is forfeited.

Impressive start

He quickly made up for lost time, leaving Hallett looking decidedly flat, by taking four frames to move into a 4-2 lead. But Hallett recovered well enough to force the match into a deciding frame in which modest breaks of 36 and 35 ensured victory for Meo.

Hallett gracefully refused to blame the delay for his defeat. "After all, I was two frames up before we even started, and I should have taken advantage," he said.

Eugene Hughes, of Dublin, joins Meo in the third round. He beat Bob Harris, of Portsmouth, 5-4.

G. Miles (Birmingham) bt J. Spencer (Radcliffe) 5-3. Frames: 76-9, 66-62, 75-19, 80-7, 43-48, 43-59, 53-66, 85-40.

S. Francisco (S Africa) bt J. White (Wimbledon) 5-4. Frames: 66-57, 53-60, 14-73, 62-51, 64-15, 32-54, 16-86, 70-41, 54-29.

GUIDE BY RONALD HASTINGS

BBC-1

6.30 a.m.-9.20 Breakfast Time, with Frank Bough and Selina Scott. 10.30-10.50 Play School, rpt. 12.30 News, Weather. 12.57 Regional News (London and South East only: Financial Report and News). 1 Pebble Mill at One, including Jill Crawshaw on travel, Bill Lykyn on the P.M. house, and Peter Seabrook on fruit in Guernsey. 1.45 Bagpuss, rpt. 2-2.40 The Afternoon Show, including Fighting Phobias and Women's Peace Groups. 3.18 (not London) Regional News. 3.50 Play School, rpt. 4.10 The Family-Ness. 4.15 The Ring in the Rough Stuff. 4.25 Yogi Bear, rpt. 4.25 Dogtanian and the Three Muskehounds. 4.55 John Craven's Newsround. 5.5 Blue Peter: The Bear Facts! An eight-week old cub from Loch Lomond. (Ceefax sub-titles.) 5.35 Dr. Kildare, rpt.

6 00 NEWS, WEATHER.

6 35 REGIONAL MAGAZINES.

7 30 TOP OF THE POPS—Introduced by Mike Read and Bruno Brookes.

8 00 ONLY FOOLS AND HORSES—Happy Returns. The start of a new series, with both Trotter brothers pursuing feminine interests. (Ceefax sub-titles.)

8 30 A QUESTION OF SPORT — The sporting quiz (Ceefax sub-titles.)

9 00 NEWS, WEATHER.

9 25 MISS MARPLE: THE MOVING FINGER—The first in a new Agatha Christie two-part adaptation set in an East Anglian village where nearly all the characters are getting poison-pen letters. We are in the late 1940s, with a beautiful Lagonda tourer and a body soon found. The opening run-through of who's who is rather clumsy, and hard to keep up with and the dialogue ("sending me up") sometimes rings false. With Joan Hickson in the title part. (Ceefax sub-titles.)

BBC-2

6.30 a.m.-7.20 Open University. 9.20-3 p.m. Daytime on Two, a run of 15 short educational programmes. 5.25 News. Weather. 5.30 The Show Me Show, rpt: "fast-moving science circus" with John Craven and Maggie Philbin.

7 00 "THE LEMON DROP KID" (1951, b/w)—Bob Hope as a bookie who has to find 10,000 dollars by Christmas Day or stand up to a gang leader's fury. Adapated from a Damon Runyan story. With Marilyn Maxwell, Lloyd Nolan and Fred Clark

8 30 OUT OF COURT—including an interview with psychiatrist Anthony Storr who argues that insanity should no longer be a legal defence in murder trials.

9 00 THE MISTRESS—Final episode in a disappointing Carla Lane serial. Luke arranges to spend a weekend with mistress Maxine.

9 30 FORTY MINUTES—Free. Following the experiences of three mental patients who leave hospital and move into seaside boarding houses, to try to cope for themselves. Another in this series which badly needs a commentator and much more information to fill in the gaps. Often very static, by turns sad and unintentionally funny. It won't do summer bookings any good at one Sussex resort.

10 10 THE ROCKFORD FILES—The Trees, the Bees and T. T. Flowers, part one. An old friend of Rockford senior is forcibly committed to an old people's hospital so that relatives can sell his land. Jim is called in to help. Repeat.

11 00 NEWSNIGHT. 11.45 Weather.

11 50-12.50 OPEN UNIVERSITY.

ITV Thames

6.15 a.m. Good Morning Britain. 9.25 Thames News Headlines. 9.30 For Schools. 12 The Little Green Man. 12.10 Mooncat and Co: Scary, rpt. 12.30 The Sullivans. 1 News. 1.20 Thames News. 1.30 Falcon Crest: Father's Da.. 2.30 Daytime, with Sarah Kennedy. 3 Gems. 3.25 Thames News Headlines. 3.30 Sons and Daughters. 4 The Little Green Man, rpt. 4.15 The Moomins. 4.20 Sooty. 4.40 Words, Words, Words. 5 Dangermouse. 5.15 Blockbusters.

5 45 NEWS.

6 00 THAMES NEWS—With Andrew Gardner and Tina Jenkins.

6 30 THAMES SPORT—Presented by Steve Rider.

7 00 KNIGHT RIDER—Junkyard Dog. Once again, no additional guidance as what it may be about.

8 00 DUTY FREE—Hasta La Vista. Robert takes to the bottle, Amy hangs on to husband David in spite of Linda. Last of these repeats.

8 30 MINDER—You Lose Some, You Win Some. Anthony Valentine as the incurable gambler, Maurice, moves back on to the scene with a new system and a team of six amateur punters. Casino managements take umbrage, so he needs minding. Repeat.

9 30 TV EYE—investigates "Serial Killers".

10 00 NEWS AT TEN; followed by Thames News Headlines.

10 30 KOJAK—One for the Morgue. Kojak is not happy even when a case against a gangster is officially closed. He goes on with it. Repeat.

Channel 4

2.30 p.m. "Confessions of a Nazi Spy" (1939, b/w): very early pre-WW2 film about the Nazi menace in the U.S.A., three years, in fact, before America declared war, but Warner Bros were ahead of them. Edward G. Robinson as a G-man in a good, semi-documentary-style drama, with George Sanders, Paul Lukas and Francis Lederer as Germans. Was immediately banned by 18 countries. 4.20 Countdown. 4.50 "Edge of Darkness" (1943, b/w): another anti-Nazi film, this time in Norway, and rather less convincing. A melodrama of resistance, with Errol Flynn as the leader. Fine support from Ann Sheridan, Walter Huston, Judith Anderson and Ruth Gordon and plenty of courageous action, but touches of Hollywood here and there.

7 00 CHANNEL FOUR NEWS—At 7.50 Comment and Weather.

8 00 DISCOVERY—David Bellamy and Miranda Robertson looking back to Victorian technology and seeing how scientific ideas changed. Plus Professor Richard Gregory on the importance and influence of microscopes and telescopes.

8 30 TREASURE HUNT—The Island of Corfu. Contestants from Pontypool and Sheffield.

9 30 THE NATION'S HEALTH—Acute. Starting a repeat run of the four-part drama series by G. F. Newman, set in a British teaching hospital where attitudes and beliefs are being questioned. We follow a woman doctor, played by Vivienne Ritchie, through her early career, each film showing a different branch of health care. Here she is interviewed for a place on a surgery team.

11 05 BILLIARDS—Mark Wildman v Fred Davis. The winner to meet Rex Williams in the final.

11 50 ASSAULTED NUTS — Quick-fire comedy sketches "that leave nothing sacred".

12 15-12.45 HALL OF MIRRORS—The Church of England. In part seven we finally meet the Anglican religion, discussed by Professor James Mackey and the Rev. Anthony Harvey, Canon of Westminster Abbey.

Every week the Venice Simplon-Orient-Express sets off from the famous Santa Lucia station, close to the Grand Canal, on its leisurely way to London, Victoria.

And every week, twice a week, from now until November, it returns to Venice from London, via Paris, Zürich and Innsbruck.

The new timetable has been specially arranged so that you travel through both the Arlberg and the famous Brenner passes in daylight – to see the best of the spectacular Alpine scenery, on your way to or from the most magical city in the world – Venice!

The atmosphere, service, and haute cuisine meals, which are all included in the price, are everything you'd dreamed they'd be.

And from £435 per person, it's an experience you can afford, at least once in a lifetime.

REQUEST STOP FOR HASTY BUS BILL

By GODFREY BARKER

KINGS govern by popular assemblies only when they cannot do without them, raged Charles James Fox at George III.

Fox never knew Mr Nicholas Ridley, the Transport Secretary. Nick and George have a lot in common, he would agree.

As an autocrat, though, George's hallmark was haughtiness. Mr Ridley's is irony and elegiac shambles.

Mr Ridley blew up a first class constitutional crisis about the arrogance of the Executive. MPs of all parties accused him of trampling on the cherished backbench privileges which, since 1689, have stood between you, me and the dark night of Fascism.

Gasping for cash

The day began with Mr Ridley facing his usual choice between the disastrous and the unpalatable. On form, he opted for disaster.

London Transport, it emerged, will be broke by end-February. Mr Ridley has a Bill to hand to rush it £50m. Its Second Reading went through on Tuesday night amid high farce about the 77 bus, Mornington Crescent and the Deputy Speaker nodding off.

LT, therefore, is gasping for cash. There are only 28 days in February. Today is the 21st. This Bill has still to go through the Lords as well.

Mr Ridley, with an eye on the Hackney bus garage paypackets running dry, had already persuaded the Opposition to the unusual course of storming the Bill through Committee, Report and Third Reading today. That was lucky. Yesterday he decided to go a bit too far.

His opportunity arose when, by "a spectacular cock-up" (Mr Dennis Skinner) in the Environment Department, Commons business for the day fell suddenly vacant.

The Transport Secretary, unlike angels, rushed in. He moved his desperately urgent Bus Transfusion Bill a day forward. Over, now, to Mr Brian Sedgemore, the lugubrious Labour Jefty for Hackney.

"I was drained of nervous energy and physical stamina, Mr Speaker. I was like a nervous rag. I got up at 5.30 am to read HANSARD on this Bill so I could put down amendments.

"As ever the telephone rang. Then I had to do my box. Then the papers. Then the phone again."

Sedgemore began to groan. "I haven't had a second since to study amendments or put anything down on the committee stage of a controversial Bill I hadn't even seen." He went ashen. "It's too much, Mr Speaker—even for a man of my capacity.

"Its' the sort of thing" he reeled and staggered "that makes an MP snap!"

The Speaker suggested graciously that he and Sedgemore take a cup of tea together. The MP for Hackney begged a rock cake.

What emerged, as MPs wept for their stricken lot, was that a serious constitutional principle was under threat.

Bills have stages separated by intervals which allow for consultation outside the Commons, for reflection and for placing reasoned amendments by backbenchers.

Deeply embarrassed

If a Bill finishes at 3 a.m. and the Treasury bench rams it on to its next stage at 3.30 p.m., the interval is telescoped into farce.

Mr Powell allowed that in national emergency, the House had rushed through legislation in this way. But Mr Ridley's problems were not of national urgency.

Mr Ridley and a deeply embarrassed Mr John Biffen, Leader of the House, tried to smoothe, flatter and appease

In the end Mr Biffen as good as said he loathed the measure but that Mr Ridley had a gun at his head. The placemen passed it 256-180.

Thatcher cheered that she was only talking about research at this stage and not deployment.

Her passage on Northern Ireland was a particularly tricky one with her audience containing so many politicians with special Irish interests.

Her appeal to American people not to give funds to the IRA drew loud applause.

But there was a now subdued reception for her review of the Ulster political scene.

Senator Edward Kennedy in particular looked unimpressed.

Appealing to the Americans not to give funds to the IRA, she said: "That money is used to buy the death of Irishmen, north and south of the border—and 70 per cent. of those killed by the IRA are Irishmen—and even the killing and wounding of American citizens visiting our country," she declared.

Mrs Thatcher said she recognised and appreciated the efforts which had been made by the American Government and Congress to bring home that message to American citizens.

But some Americans might be "misled into making contributions to seemingly innocuous groups."

She added: "Be under no illusions about the Provisional IRA. They terrorised their own communities. They are the enemies of democracy, and of freedom too.

"Do not just take my word for it: ask the people of the Irish Republic—where it is an offence even to belong to that organisation—or their elected government in Dublin."

Mrs Thatcher changed her speech, prepared some time ago, to include a tribute to Dr FitzGerald, the Irish Prime Minister, for the Dublin Government's action the day before in passing emergency legislation enabling it to seize IRA money held in a bank account.

"I salute him for the very brave thing he did yesterday," she said.

On the economy the Prime Minister said that the United Kingdom was no win its fourth year of recovery and the economy had an underlying strength.

She added: "We have not yet shared your success in bringing down unemployment, although we are creating many new jobs.

"But outputs, investment and standard of living are all at record levels and profits are well up.

"And the pound—it is too low.

"But whatever the proper international level of sterling, it is a marvellous time for Americans not only to visit Britain, but to invest with us."

SHUTTLE TO AID 'SPACE WARS' RESEARCH

By Our Washington Staff

Starting in 1987, two American space shuttle flights a year will carry experiments involved in president Reagan's Strategic Defence Initiative plan for anti-missile defences, the Pentagon has disclosed.

One such experiment would be for developing sensors that can pick up the "signature" of a missile launch by registering its first-stage booster trail, informed sources said. The other would involve mounting a hinged telescopic sight which could be used to provide a steady view of objects thousands of miles distant.

Mr Michael Burch, the Chief Pentagon spokesman, said the object of the shuttle-borne experiments would be to "test the ability to detect, track and aim against targets in space."

Nato unity agreement

the economy and the effects of the weak pound and strong dollar will be held this morning when Mrs Thatcher meets the United States Treasury Secretary and other leading members of the Administration before she flies back to London.

Mid East accord

In her statement after the meeting Mrs Thatcher said that both she and Mr Reagan had agreed that the moment was propitious for a fresh effort to achieve progress towards a Middle East settlement.

"I told the President of my support for the statement issued following King Fahd's recent visit to Washington, and we both endorse King Hussein's efforts to arrive at a joint Arab decision which would allow for direct negotiations with Israel," she said.

Describing her trip as "a very happy and successful visit," Mrs Thatcher said it was a particular honour that Mr and Mrs Reagan had accepted an invitation to dine at the British Embassy on an occasion marking the 200 years since the establishment of anglo-United States diplomatic relations.

Courage of Fitzgerald

Mrs Thatcher said that the two had held important talks on Northern Ireland.

An American official said later that the two had talked of improved and greater co-operation against international terrorism, and that Mrs Thatcher had praised the courage shown by the Prime Minister of the Republic of Ireland, Mr Fitzgerald, in pushing through legislation making it impossible for the IRA to use Irish banks to deposit stolen money.

On discussions of the future of Mr Reagan's Space Defence Initiative, a United States official confirmed that Mrs Thatcher had informed Mr Reagan that she wanted British and European industry to participate in defencecontracts in the proposed $26 billion (£25·79 billion) research programme.

The two leaders also discussed the sensitive question of the 40th anniversary of V-E day observances in Europe in May, when Mr Reagan will be visiting Europe.

An American official said they agreed on the need to pay attention to West Germany's "sensitivities and concerns" over the celebrations.

While Mrs Thatcher voiced her concern over the effects of the soaring dollar and the problem of currency volatility, she also observed that the "biggest danger would be in the rapid decline of the value of the dollar," the official said.

GORBACHEV SPEAKS FOR CHERNENKO

By NIGEL WADE in Moscow

The Kremlin heir-apparent, Mr Gorbachev, last night conveyed greetings to the Russian people from President Chernenko, the ailing Soviet leader, who has not been seen in public this year.

Mr Gorbachev, 53, followed the pattern set by other leading Kremlin figures in including greetings from the absent leader in his speech as a candidate in next Sunday's parliamentary "elections."

President Chernenko, 73, who suffers from lung disease and is believed to have had two recent strokes, is due to speak tomorrow, but his appearance seems doubtful.

CBI SAYS 'TAKE £ INTO EUROPE'

By Our Business Correspondent

The Confederation of British Industry yesterday performed a "U" tur nand decided to press the Government to take the pound into the European Monetary System in an effort to provide greater stability for sterling.

Only a minority of members at a CBI governing council meeting opposed the policy shift.

When his ship was torpedoed... so was his future peace of mind

Leading Seaman R.....t H.....n served right through the war. He was torpedoed in the Atlantic and suffered from exposure. He served in Landing craft, and his home received a direct hit from a bomb while he was there on leave.

In 1945 his mind could take no more, and he spent the next 25 years in and out of mental hospitals. He now lives with us.

Sailors, Soldiers and Airmen still risk mental breakdown in serving their country. However brave they may be, the strains are sometimes unbearable.

We care for these gallant men and women, at home and in hospital. We run our own Convalescent Home, a Hostel for the younger homeless who can still work, and a Veterans' Home for the ageing warriors who are no longer able to look after themselves. We also assist people like R.....t H.....n at Pensions Tribunals, ensuring that they receive all that is their due.

These men and women have sacrificed their minds in service. To help them, we must have funds. Please send a donation and, perhaps, remember us with a legacy. The debt is owed by all of us.

PIT TALKS

By JOHN RICHARDS

advanced the interests of its members and their employment opportunities, the draft continued. In this refard the Coal Board "is firmly of the view that the interests of all its employees will be best served by the development of an economically sound industry."

It was on these proposals, entering the connotation that the NUM would accept the closure of uneconomic pits, that the draft formula was thrown out.

Mr Sidney Vincent, leader of the Lancashire miners, said: "We have been conned. They are trying to make fools of us."

Mr Harry Hanlon, Cumbria area reprensetative, said: "It all ended in tears. We have been taken for a ride."

Mr Trevor Bell, leader of the white-collar Colliery Officials and Staffs Area, and Mr Eric Clarke, Scottish Area general secretary, both said that the proposals were worse than those rejected by the union last Sunday.

TUC meeting

The union executive decided to revert to its own draft of the peace formula, which deletes all reference to economics in determining the future size of the coal industry and the future of individual pits.

The rebuff leaves the TUC chiefs in a particularly embarrassing position and they were still meeting after the pit union leaders had stormed out of Congress House.

Mr Willis had told the NUM leaders that the revised terms were the best he could obtain from Mr MacGregor and Mr Walker.

This was confirmed in a letter, accompanying the draft proposals from the Coal Board chairman to the TUC general secretary.

The TUC team did not recommend the proposals to the NUM executive, but simply said that they represented the final position following last Tuesday's meeting at which Mrs Thatcher had emphasised there could be no fudge in any settlement.

Mrs Thatcher, who met the TUC at Downing Street, had said there had to be a clear and unambiguous settlement on the central issue, the future of uneconomic pits.

Late night talks

Yesterday's peace moves began only hours after the end of late night discussions between the TUC leaders and Mr Walker at the Dept of Energy which ended early in the morning.

Mr Willis briefed the NUM national officers, Mr Scargill, Mr Peter Heathfield, general secretary; and Mr Michael McGahey, vice president.

The TUC team then had a further meeting with Mr MacGregor at a London hotel to try and thrash out further details of the peace proposals.

The NUM executive met briefly and then adjourned until late afternoon to await the outcome of these talks. It was after they reconvened that full details of the proposals were disclosed to them and rapidly rejected.

The TUC team seeing Mr MacGregor and Mr Walker were Mr Willis, Mr Jack Eccles, TUC chairman; Mr David Basnett, chairman of the TUC economic committee; Mr Moss Evans, chairman of the international committee; Mr Ray Buckton, vice chairman of the general council; Mr William Keys, chairman of the employment committee; and Mr Gerry Russell, chairman of the nationalised industries committee.

The atmosphere earlier in the day had been one of optimism with the NUM leaders hoping to hear details of an acceptable formula to put before today's special conference.

They felt the strike had gone on too long and wanted to resolve it.

'Scabs charter'

But when the peace terms were revealed, this mood changed and their decision was that after over 11 months of dispute they were not prepared to concede on the main point at issue.

Indeed some Left wingers on the NUM executive even attacked the wording of the proposals committing the two sides to "reconciliation and restoration of relationships," saying this was a "scabs charter" inviting strikers who returned to bury their differences and work alongside men who had already abandoned the strike.

The prospect ahead is that the stoppage seems certain to continue up to its first anniversary and beyond, with the Coal Board putting increased reliance on a continued drift back to work by disillusioned and disappointed NUM members.

However, recent back-to-work figures have suggested that the main "surge" back to the coalfields is beginning to tail off, and that a hard core of strikers are now prepared to sit out the dispute in the hope of a more satisfactory negotiated settlement.
